THE FLORISTS' REVIEW

CARNATION NUMBER

This Lord & Burnham house of the Idle Hour Nurseries is 60 feet wide and 159 feet long.

Things to Think Over About Our Two Constructions

BY the two, we mean the Semi-iron or Pipe Frame, and the Sectional Iron Frame.

The Semi-iron materials cost less to buy but cost more to erect than the Iron Frame.

The Iron Frame materials cost more to buy but cost less to erect.

The masonry, the glass, the painting, the heating and the benching cost exactly the same for either.

For houses of moderate widths, the Semi-iron makes the best house possible for the money.

For widths beyond 38 feet, the Semi-iron requires so many more columns than the Iron Frame that the Iron Frame becomes the more desirable.

For endurance and absolute rigidity, of course the Iron Frame is superior.

In houses up to 78 feet wide, we can build them with our improved construction so that only two columns are needed.

Of course, when it gets right down to fine facts and figures, the wide houses have proven they can produce the best stock at a less cost.

"Your concern has been exceedingly kind to us in the past, and you can rest assured that if we are ever in the market for any more greenhouse material we will not show a lack of appreciation for what you have done for us. When concerns treat us right we believe in sticking to them, and we think your concern is one of the whitest in the country."

Why don't you write us the size of house you are thinking of building, along with the particulars about its location and the crops you want to grow? Then we will gladly advise you as to the construction that seems best adapted to your purposes.

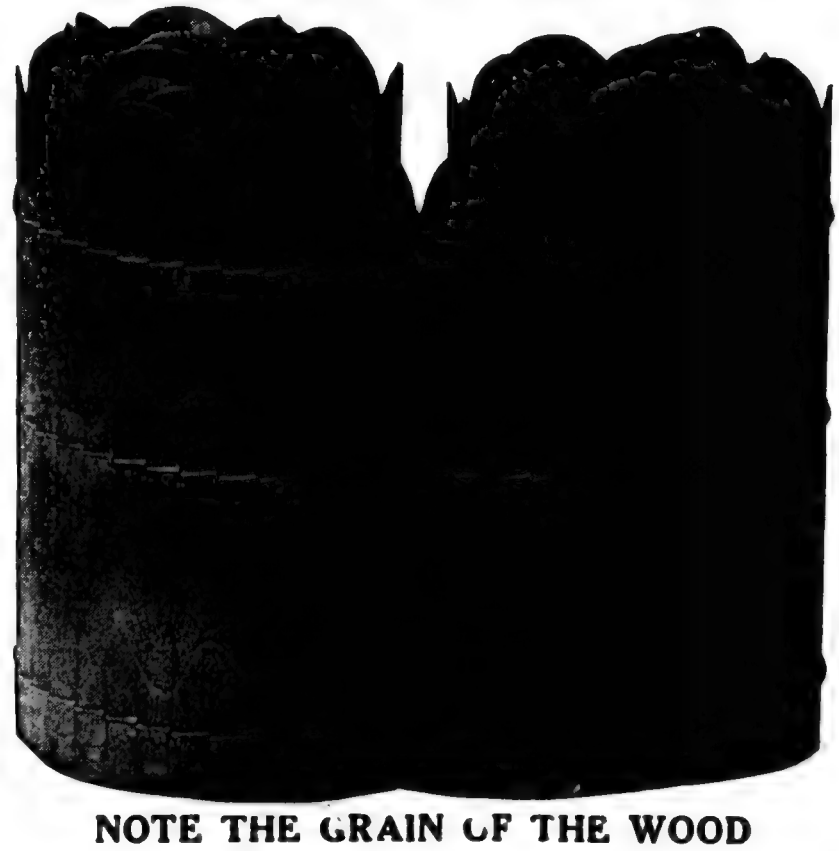
Crepe-Wood

IT LASTS A SEASON

The Newest Florists' Accessory

A Waterproof Covering for Flower Pots and Flower Boxes. Manufactured from wood and can be cut with shears. Crepe-wood is an ideal covering for potted plants and boxes. It is manufactured from thin sheets of veneer and reinforced with strong thread seams. It stands the water and does not become mushy and soiled like paper. For window decorations and display stands it is especially suited, as the plants may be sprinkled with a can or hose without removing the covering.

HOW TO MAKE A FLOWER BOX



Simply unroll around any old box and tack in position. A fiber ribbon tied around the sides of the box adds to the appearance. Lath, stained dark green and tacked on, to create a paneled effect, makes a permanent flower box which may be used outdoors if desired. Potted plants may be used in the box for display if desired.

FOR FLOWER POTS AND POTTED PLANTS

Crepe-wood is tied around the pot with a ribbon, cord or wire. Try it in your window or display stand. Don't be afraid to wet it.

SEND 20 CENTS FOR SAMPLE ROLL, 6 INCHES WIDE, 10 FEET LONG

NOTE THE GRAIN OF THE WOOD

Growers as well as florists will find this material fine for tacking around small boxes of tulips and spring flowers.

Temporarily we will fill orders from the factory upon receipt of cash with order.

Plain, uncolored rolls furnished if desired at 15 per cent discount from prices on green.

PRIMEROSE

It's like Sunburst and it's like Ophelia.

Better and more even color all winter than Sunburst and grows and produces better.

Deeper in color and stronger, darker foliage than Ophelia.

A money-maker for the grower and a fine new color for the store man that wants novelties.

Come here and see it growing.

ROSALIE

(Baby Chatenay)

A beautiful small rose. Probably best described as junior in size, as it's somewhat larger than Brunner and the other small roses.

A long pointed bud of beautiful clear pink, similar to the parent—Abel Chatenay. The foliage and habit are also similar.

Profitable for the grower because so free, and a splendid corsage rose and make-up rose for the store man.

Come here and see it growing.

NEW ROSES

WE are growing on our place the finest collection of seedling roses ever produced.

Such is the verdict of many of the best rose growers in America.

They represent the crowning effort of Mr. E. G. Hill's life, spent as a rose hybridizer.

Ophelia, the queen of present-day "forcers," is the mother of them all.

They possess the sturdy growth and disease-resisting foliage of their parent.

We wish to announce that we will disseminate, from time to time, in conjunction with The E. G. Hill Co., this superb lot of real money-making roses.

Come and see them growing.

We can give you quotations, in limited quantities, on well grown Grafted Roses.

Carnations and Chrysanthemums, both in cuttings and plants.

Write for quotations.

NEW CARNATIONS

ROSALIA—Cerise pink, large three and one-half inch flower of a true cerise pink color. Form is perfect. Calyx strong, never bursting. Stem is at all times strong and wiry. The growth is far above the average when we consider vigor, health and early and free flowering qualities. ROSALIA is a decided improvement on ROSETTE, having a better color and a better commercial habit.

OLD GOLD—We offer this as the earliest and most free flowering yellow carnation we have yet produced. A decided improvement over YELLOW PRINCE, being of a stronger growth, is perfectly clean and healthy, produces larger stems and more bloom. The color is a deep yellow with faint pink stripes.

The above two varieties, Price: $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000

NEW LATE CHRYSANTHEMUM

FALL BEAUTY—A large Japanese reflex of a pleasing pink color with a shading of deep cream to the base of the petals and center of the flower. Has an extra strong stem, is especially fine for Thanksgiving, maturing November 25th to December 10th. The color, combined with its being so late and its extra keeping qualities, makes it of especial commercial value.

Price: $3.50 per doz.; $30.00 per 100

Hamburg Late White Chrysanthemum

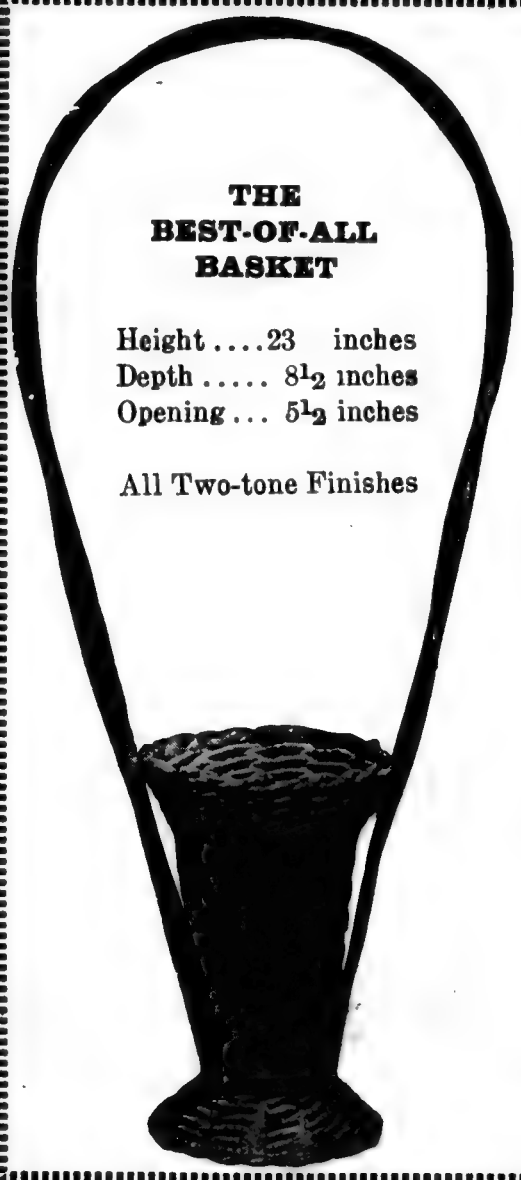
The examining committees of the Chrysanthemum Society of America scored Hamburg Late White as follows:

PHILADELPHIA, December 14 . . . . 88 points, commercial
BOSTON, December 14 . . . . . 83 points, commercial
NEW YORK, December 18 . . . . . 85 points, commercial

This picture was taken December 10, 1916, and will give a good idea of what Hamburg Late White looks like when grown to single stems, planted six inches each way.

Hamburg Late White is pure white under all weather conditions, and is a sport of White Maud Dean, but has no trace of pink as has the original.

The average grower of Chrysanthemums must have varieties which are easy to handle, and from which he can cut as near 100% of perfect blooms as possible. Hamburg Late White has been grown for the last four years, and produces a very high proportion of good flowers. It is not an exhibition variety, but for late white, one of the best for commercial purposes. It can be had in bloom the latter part of November, by taking an early bud; but by selecting later buds, most of the flowers are cut during December, and we would advise a selection of late buds, as the later buds come somewhat fuller, and by selecting late buds, flowers can be had as late as the middle of January.



Keeping qualities are excellent, and where a light, graceful white flower is wanted, Hamburg Late White cannot be surpassed.

Hamburg Late White will be disseminated in the spring of 1917. Plants will be ready April 1, 1917, and all orders will be filled in rotation.

The New Queen of Red Roses

The color is a new and brilliant red. The petals are large (see illustration), and soft and velvety in texture.

Leaves are large, well shaped and rich green in color.

Its shipping and keeping qualities are remarkable. A dozen specimen roses were brought by train from Champaign to Chicago, taken to several places, inspected and finally left lying on a desk in our office. Though in bloom when finally put in water and placed in our refrigerator, we found them closed to buds in the morning.

Mrs. Sarah Yeats is not an experimental rose, but one that has been successfully produced under ordinary greenhouse conditions.

This photographic reproduction shows the actual size of the bloom on the Mrs. Sarah Yeats rose.

Stems run from eighteen to forty-two inches long without pinching.

CARNATION MEN AT HOOSIER CAPITAL

The American Carnation Society held its twenty-sixth annual meeting and exhibition this week at Indianapolis, in the heart of the Indiana carnation belt. The success of the affair was achieved along lines made familiar by being closely followed for several years. Has progress slowed up?

NONE of us will concede that progress has ceased to be made in the development of the carnation, once dubbed "pink" and later rechristened the "divine" flower; but it is contended by many that the pace has slowed down. The exhibition which opened at the Claypool hotel, Indianapolis, January 31, while perhaps more attractive than any previous showing of carnations in the middle west, owed its success to the participation of the retailers rather than to the advance made by the growers.

This was the twenty-sixth annual exhibition of the American Carnation Society and for several years it has been at work along the same lines, holding its meeting in a popular hotel, arranging a show for the public and inviting the flower-lovers of the community to come and admire. Even at Indianapolis, where the carnation at its best is well known, there was nothing but praise for the quality of the stock shown. It was good—almost too good, for the average grower appreciates that he cannot compete and does not enter his stock, with the result that the annual shows are almost wholly made by a few specialists.

OFFICERS ELECTED.

President—W. J. Vesey, Jr., Fort Wayne, Ind.

Vice-President—Charles S. Strout, Biddeford, Me.

Secretary—A. F. J. Baur, Indianapolis, Ind.

Treasurer—F. E. Dorner, Lafayette, Ind.

Director for Five Years—Peter Fisher, Ellis, Mass.

Judges—William Nicholson, J. H. Dunlop.

Good Culture.

High culture is the outstanding feature of these shows. The exhibitors almost to a man are possessed of unusual ability as growers and the stock they stage is of such splendid quality that it takes a mighty good novelty to make a showing that will command favorable attention when it is set up alongside the older varieties grown by these experts. That is why progress appears to have slowed down.

The 1917 show makes it seem more than ever apparent that the effort to increase the size of the carnation has been abandoned; it looks as though, by general agreement, the modern carnation is large enough, at least that greater size is not desirable until form, substance, fragrance and stem have been further developed, while the grower of average ability, ground between rising costs and falling prices, will assert that floriferousness, productivity, is what is wanted of the novelties—sorts that will give more than the twenty blooms per plant which now is considered a good average by those who keep count.

The size of the Indianapolis show was helped by two factors, first of which is the fact that carnations have been more plentiful and lower in price this January than at this time in any of the last few years, while Indianapolis is one of the most accessible of western cities. The exhibitor farthest from home was Strout's, of Biddeford, Me., but Boston growers were well represented and the Cottage Gardens upheld the banner of Long Island growers. The eastern specialists always have been staunch supporters of the society.

William J. Vesey, Jr.
(President-elect American Carnation Society.)

Dominant Varieties.

The Indianapolis show served to demonstrate the staying qualities of the varieties that have been in the lead the last few years.

Flesh pink still predominates; just as Enchantress is the most abundant variety in the markets, so is Enchantress color the leading one in the exhibitions. But where the market growers as a body cling to Enchantress, the specialists have discarded it and use Enchantress Supreme, Pink Delight, Gloriosa or Alice.

Matchless is without a serious competitor among disseminated varieties when it comes to a quality white, although White Enchantress still is far more abundant in the average commission house.

Nothing has appeared to displace Mrs. C. W. Ward as the best medium pink.

Gorgeous, the quality flower among the dark pinks, nearly has been dropped, for slowness, and Rosette is the principal variety in its color.

The keenest competition is in reds. Beacon has not been satisfactory, although still largely grown, and last year three new ones, Belle Washburn, Aviator and Nebraska, lined up with Champion in the effort to displace it. They have not been in the hands of the general run of growers long enough to have settled their relative standing, but this year five new reds or scarlets are joining in the race, Merry Christmas, Thenanthos, Doris, Radium and Cornell.

The New Varieties.

Among the varieties being sent out this season interest centers on the following:

Rosalia is another of the long line of novelties raised by F. Dorner & Sons Co., La Fayette, Ind. It is cerise pink, a color in which there is little competition. Rosette, also a Dorner introduction, is almost the only representative of the class, but the Dorners assert their belief that Rosalia will displace Rosette. While the flowers show up well on the exhibition table, the originators claim its special merit is in the habit of growth.

Cottage Maid, while being disseminated this year, is so well known to the regular attendants at the A. C. S. meetings that it seems scarcely to class as new. It was the winner in the flesh pink class at St. Louis a year ago at the St. Louis show, where it also took the sweepstakes for best entry in the color classes for 100 blooms. It also has been seen at the other shows at Philadelphia, Cleveland and New York. It is a sport of Mrs. C. W. Ward, identical in all but color, and the disseminators, the Cottage Gardens Co., Queens, L. I., have been sending it to the New York market for several years.

Merry Christmas, described as scarlet, is the result of a long series of crosses, beginning with Victory and Beacon. It was raised by Baur & Steinkamp, at Indianapolis, and has been a factor in the Christmas supply there for several years. The bloom is of good size and form, carried on strong stems. It is claimed that it seldom splits.

Arawana is a bright crimson seedling raised by A. N. Pierson, Inc., Cromwell, Conn. The color speaks for itself and the stem and calyx are good. The flower is of moderate size and the originator says that as a market variety it has paid better than any other crimson that has been tried at Cromwell.

Old Gold is yellow, the latest of many raised by F. Dorner & Sons Co., La Fayette, Ind. While yellow carnations have had no vogue in this country, there has been a large sale for them abroad and the introducers claim this is the best to date.

Radium was raised at the New Castle establishment of P. J. Olinger. It is a cross of Victory on O. P. Bassett. The color is scarlet, the blooms of large size, with good stem and calyx. The originator claims for the variety that it is an excellent producer and is specially good for shipping because it does not go to sleep. It has been known in the Cincinnati market for the last two years.

Superb is a new color in the flesh pink class, being decidedly on the salmon order. It is a seedling of Enchantress crossed with Gloriosa. The bloom is of good size and form, carried on a stiff stem. It has been seen at most of the flower shows of the last three years, during which time it has been grown by the originator, the J. D. Thompson Carnation Co., Joliet, Ill.

Thenanthos, raised by Anton Then, Chicago, and being distributed by the A. L. Randall Co., although red, is said to be a seedling of Enchantress, crossed with another red seedling that had the blood of Mrs. Nelson and Mrs. Lawson. It is possible, therefore, to trace its parentage back to Wm. Scott. It has been shown at Chicago for three or four years and there has been a steady improvement in the blooms. Strong claims are made for it as a producer.

Doris was first seen at the A. C. S. show at St. Louis last year, where it scored eighty-eight points after being shipped from Framingham, Mass., where the seedling was raised by S. J. Goddard. It is a crimson, of excellent form and substance, with strong stem and calyx.

Cornell is the name given by Ira G. Marvin, Wilkes-Barre, Pa., to a red seedling grown at his place for several years and which now is being shown to the trade for the first time. It is not of the largest size, but strong claims are made for it as a commercial "bread and butter" variety.

Albert Roper is a cerise seedling exhibited at previous shows as No. 360. It was raised by the late Albert Roper, of Tewksbury, Mass., and will be disseminated in a limited way by his estate. It is not a large flower, but is said to be a good bloomer and a profitable variety on the Roper place. It is known to many in the Boston market.

Next Year's Novelties.

Among the varieties that will be put on the market next year Crystal White stands out as the finest white thus far produced. It is described as an improved Matchless, being without the least trace of pink. In addition to purity of color it has excellent form. It was raised at Cottage Gardens, the cross having been made by C. W. Ward himself. It has won many prizes on the exhibition table, having been first shown at Cleveland in 1915.

Olive Whitman is a red seedling raised by M. Matheron, at Baldwins, L. I., who will send it out next year jointly with Guttman & Raynor, New York. It is a cross of Victory and Beacon.

Other varieties seen for the first time which probably will be distributed in 1918 or later were: No. 1,489, flesh pink, Dorner; Bernice, scarlet, Howard; Portland's Pride, red, Frank & Sons; Laddie, Dorner; No. 414, Baur & Steinkamp; Edna, Zweifel; Serin and Ruffus.

Miscellaneous Exhibits.

For probably the first time in the history of the A. C. S. there were chrysanthemums at its show. The varieties were Hamburg Late White, exhibited by W. F. Kasting Co., Buffalo, for the originator, C. F. Guenther, Hamburg, N. Y., and Mistletoe, staged by H. P. Smith.

J. A. Peterson & Sons, Cincinnati, showed begonias and cyclamens.

The A. L. Randall Co., Chicago, set up a vase of the new red rose, Mrs. Sarah Yeats, grown by its originator, J. E. Yeats, Champaign, Ill.

Carl Hagenburger, Mentor, O., showed a new seedling cherry.

Peter Weiland, New Castle, Ind., made a display of sweet peas.

Deerfield Nursery, Deerfield, Ill., showed Radiance, a new seedling sweet pea.

Rose-pink Ophelia, staged by Fred Breitmeyer, Mt. Clemens, Mich., attracted much attention, largely because Ophelia, from which it is a sport, has proved tractable in the hands of many growers who have indifferent success with the Killarney varieties and who will welcome another color in it.

Bertermann Bros. Co., Indianapolis, showed fine snapdragons.

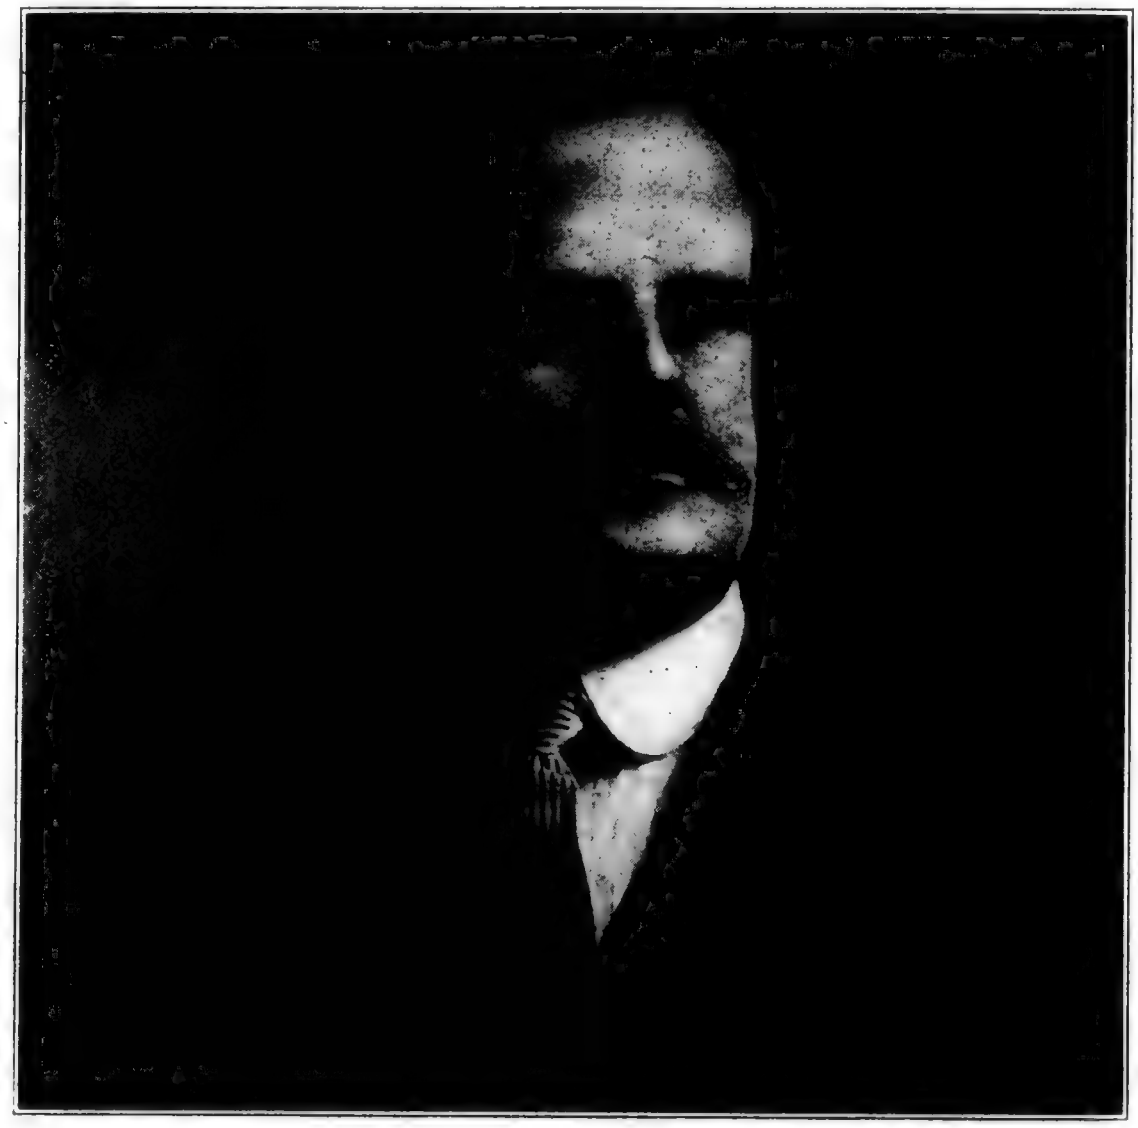
W. J. & M. S. Vesey, Fort Wayne, Ind., staged an excellent table of orchids.

Zech & Mann, Chicago, put up a display of exceptionally long-stemmed Purity freesia.

Table decorations were staged by the Hill Floral Co., Bertermann Bros. Co., A. Wiegand's Sons Co., Claypool Hotel Florist, Hensley's Flower Shop and Pahud Floral Co.

The Business Session.

The cultural ability of those who attend the annual meeting of the American Carnation Society is shown by the fact that the reading of essays has been discontinued; the members no longer care to spend the time in listening to set papers on topics which, with them at least, are threadbare. The nearest approach to a program this year was in the secretary's announcement that a discussion of the "yellows" would take place.



The morning of the first day of the meeting was devoted to staging the exhibits, a work which, if not participated in, is watched by most of those present. The hall was closed in the early afternoon to all except the judges and the secretary, but was opened to members from the completion of the judging until 8 p. m., when the doors were opened to the public. At the same time the annual business session started in an adjoining room.

The address of President Ammann and the report of Secretary Baur appear in full in this issue, together with a summary of Treasurer Dorner's financial statement.

Local Arrangements.

The local arrangements, including those for the admission of the public and the annual banquet, at the Claypool

Peter Weiland, New Castle, Ind., made a display of sweet peas.

Deerfield Nursery, Deerfield, Ill., showed Radiance, a new seedling sweet pea.

Rose-pink Ophelia, staged by Fred Breitmeyer, Mt. Clemens, Mich., attracted much attention, largely because Ophelia, from which it is a sport, has proved tractable in the hands of many growers who have indifferent success with the Killarney varieties and who will welcome another color in it.

Bertermann Bros. Co., Indianapolis, showed fine snapdragons.

W. J. & M. S. Vesey, Fort Wayne, Ind., staged an excellent table of orchids.

Zech & Mann, Chicago, put up a display of exceptionally long stemmed Purity freesia.

The Business Session.

The cultural ability of those who attend the annual meeting of the American Carnation Society is shown by the fact that the reading of essays has been discontinued; the members no longer care to spend the time in listening to set papers on topics which, with them at least, are threadbare. The nearest approach to a program this year was in the secretary's announcement that a discussion of the "yellows" would take place.

The morning of the first day of the meeting was devoted to staging the exhibits, a work which, if not participated in, is watched by most of those present. hotel during the evening of February 1, were in charge of the Indiana State Florists' Association, the officers of which are as follows:

President—W. J. Vesey, Jr., Fort Wayne.

First vice-president—Irwin Bertermann, Indianapolis.

Second vice-president—Theodore Dorner, La Fayette.

Secretary—O. E. Steinkamp, Indianapolis.

Treasurer—H. L. Wiegand, Indianapolis.

The A. C. S. was the first of the trade societies to adopt the practice of closing its meeting with a banquet for which each member buys his own ticket.

SECRETARY'S REPORT.

[The following is the report of Secretary A. F. J. Baur, presented to the American Carnation Society at its meeting at Indianapolis, January 31, 1917.]

During the last twelve months the secretary's office has been unusually busy. With our participation in the National Flower Show in Philadelphia last March and the soliciting of funds in aid of Miss Anna Jarvis, there has been much extra work and some additional expense. The receipts, however, have also increased somewhat, though not quite so much as the expense, so that at the end of this fiscal year we find ourselves with somewhat less cash in the general fund than a year ago, but still in good condition.

Financial Statement.

During the last year the secretary's office has received:

Dues	$ 729.00
Advertising	261.85
Miscellaneous	46.05
Mothers' day	154.00
Total	$1.190.90

All of which was turned over to the treasurer and his receipt taken therefor.

The secretary's and treasurer's books were checked over by a public auditor and found correct. All bills are being met promptly and all accounts due the society are being collected without loss. We are pleased to note that twenty-six pages of advertising space in this year's premium schedule were taken by our members and friends. We feel that our members should make an effort to patronize these advertisers as much as possible, in order to make it worth their while to use these pages as an advertising medium.

Membership Decreasing.

The one department that gives your secretary more concern than any other is the membership list. During the last year we have taken in forty-five new members and reinstated six; yet, in spite of this unusual number of additions, we are now thirteen members behind last report. The list now stands at 312 annual members and twelve life members, making a total of 324.

During the year we have lost Albert Roper, who died March 1; Wm. F. Kasting, who died June 15; Thos. C. Joy, who died November 10, and W. E. Kroeschell, who died November 23. All of these men were favorably known to most of you and will be missed at our conventions.

We have 217 members in good standing in the Society of American Florists and therefore continue to be represented on its board of directors. Our present president, Mr. Ammann, was selected to that position, to serve during the year 1917.

New Varieties.

Since the last meeting, we have received seven new varieties for registration. Fourteen others were sent over by the Perpetual Flowering Carnation Society of England.

A special silver medal was struck to commemorate the society's twenty-fifth year and was awarded to each winner of a first premium in the carnation section at the National Flower Show in Philadelphia last March. Those who received the medal are S. J. Goddard, E. G. Hill Co., Strafford Flower Farms, J. W. Minott Co., E. F. Lieker, Cottage Gardens Co., A. A. Pembroke, Strouts, Wm. Kleinheinz, W. L. Ellis, Wm. Graham, Mrs. Wm. Austin, A. Harvey & Sons, Countess Eulalia and W. E. Lenk, fifteen in all.

This society took an active part in the National Flower Show in Philadelphia last March. Not only did we prepare the premium schedule and the rules for staging the carnation section of the show, but members of this society contributed $515 toward paying the premiums of this department, thereby reducing the liability of the management to that extent.

Changes in Premiums.

Early in the year the secretary, by direction of the board of directors, solicited funds from the members for the Mothers' Day fund which was being raised by the Society of American Florists, for the purpose of assisting Miss Jarvis in promoting that day. As a result, $154 was raised and sent to Secretary Young.

The board of directors held the customary post-convention meeting January 27, in St. Louis. A second meeting was held in Philadelphia March 28, instead of the usual midsummer meeting. At this meeting some changes were made in the premiums offered in most of the classes contained in the premium schedule for this year's exhibition. In Section A, classes 1 to 11, the premiums were raised from $10 and $6 to $15 and $10. In Section B, classes 12 to 36, the premiums were raised from $5 and $3 to $8 and $5. In Section C only one premium, $10, is offered instead of $6 and $4. These changes have increased our liability on premiums by $219. Five disseminators have again generously contributed the premiums in Section C.

The identification badges you are wearing were provided as a result of the action taken in the meeting at St. Louis last year. They are the most practical article we were able to find for the purpose. If they are satisfactory, we will continue to use them.

The arrangements for this meeting were left entirely in the hands of our vice-president, W. J. Vesey, Jr., and his committees selected from the Indiana State Florists' Society. That they have labored earnestly and harmoniously you can see by the results accomplished. The retail men have again come forward with a splendid demonstration of the carnation's adaptability for decorative effects. They should be given credit and every encouragement possible.

THE PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL ADDRESS

The full text of the address of J. F. Ammann, president of the American Carnation Society, delivered at the convention at Indianapolis, January 31, 1917.

AS presiding officer of this organization, that has so vastly advanced the interests not only of carnation culture, but floriculture in general, I deem it indeed an honor to welcome you to this, the twenty-sixth annual meeting of the American Carnation Society, in this beautiful and centrally located city of Indianapolis.

It is not necessary for me to repeat at this time the history of this organization. Suffice it to say that I feel more and more, as I grow older, the touch of good fellowship that a meeting like this brings with it.

Making Life Worth Living.

Here we commingle in brotherly love with fellow craftsmen from all over this fair land of peace and prosperity. Here we renew old acquaintances and make new ones. Now and then we miss an old, familiar face; we ask the reason, and find that he has passed on to the Great Beyond. As with the old varieties of our beloved carnations, we miss them, but never forget them! It is these fond greetings and memories that really make life worth living, after all.

To the members of our craft who are so diligently working to produce new varieties of merit, we are probably more indebted than we realize, for were it not for something new occasionally the public interest would soon wane. The American people are great on fads, and, in order to keep up an interest, new things of special merit are always in demand.

A Good Example.

I dare say nothing has popularized the rose so much the last few years as the coming on of so many new varieties of merit, and the end is not yet, which I am sure you will be convinced of in your visit to the E. G. Hill Co. place at Richmond. A friend recently told me it was worth a trip across the continent to see the seedling roses there, so I went and I now testify that the statement is true. We see here what one firm can do by untiring effort in roses. I contend the same must be done in carnations in order to keep this flower as popular in the future as it has been in the past.

Is Something Lacking?

Much, indeed, is being done along this line by quite a few of our trusty old friends, but what seems just at this time to be lacking in the new production of carnations is that they have not enough merit to replace many of the older varieties. Either they do not produce enough to be profitably grown as standards, or the quality is not good enough to command the extra price a fancy should. But all good things come to those who wait; so let us be patient and I am sure we shall soon be rewarded.

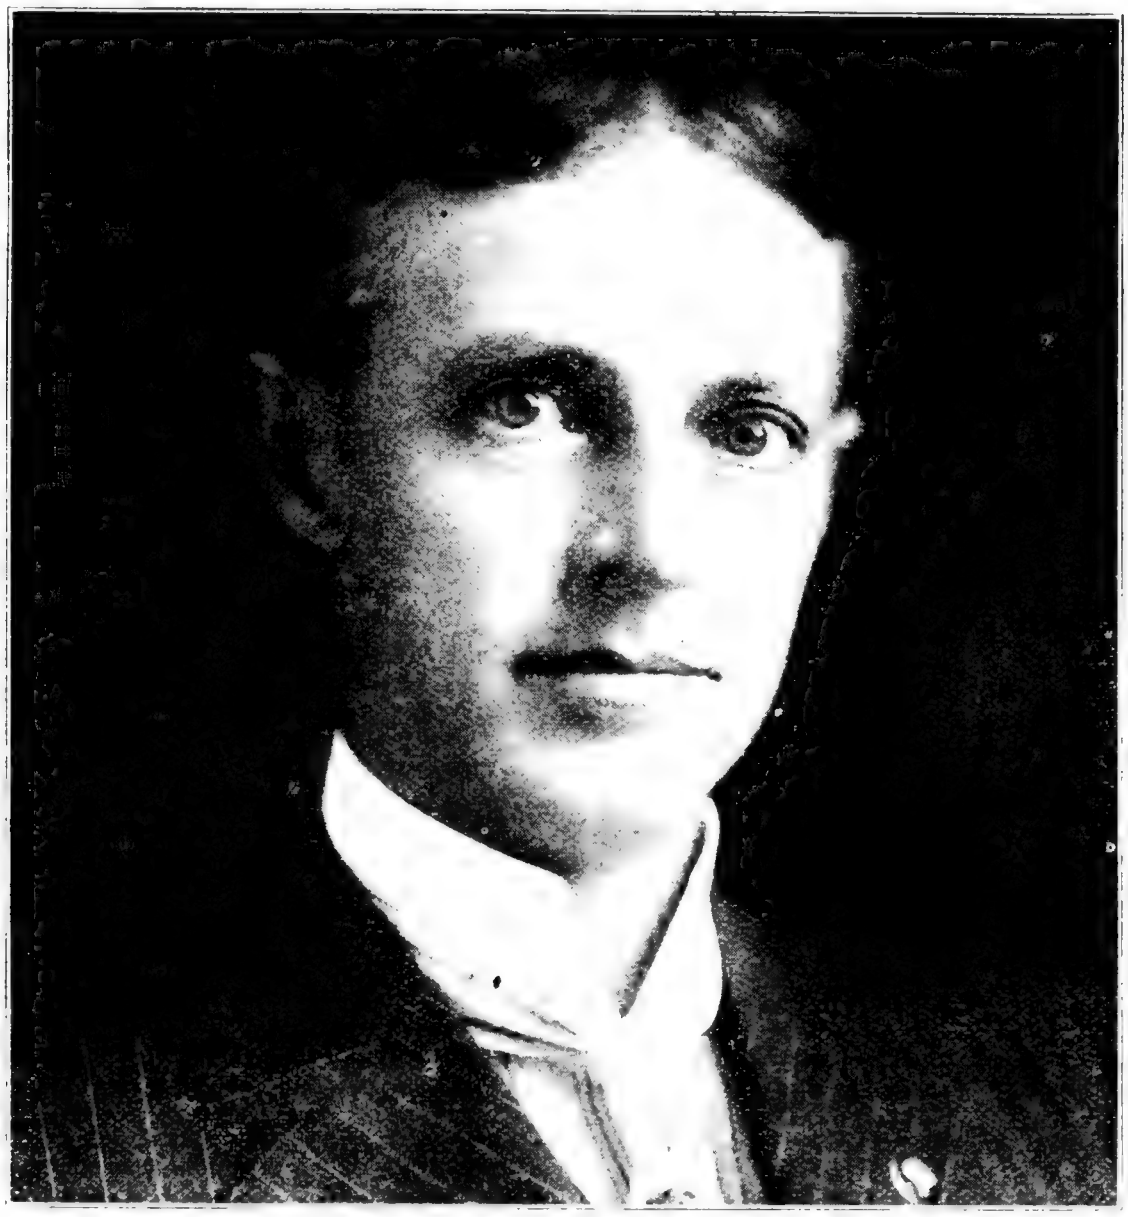
I have but a few suggestions to offer at this time. One recommendation I would offer is that the number of blooms necessary for a preliminary certificate for the Dorner memorial medal be changed from fifty to twenty-five. It has been suggested that many times it is hard to get fifty good blooms from a new variety where not so many plants are grown.

We have an ever-growing demand for the society's coöperation with local flower shows, which I am sure we can not afford to ignore. At the meeting of the board of directors in Cleveland November 12, 1915, a motion was passed to the effect that the board recommend to the convention following in January that the A. C. S. lend its coöperation to local flower shows, provided the schedule, the judges and the underwriting of said show be approved by the president and secretary of this society.

To Encourage Exhibitors.

I take it that the intention was to have the society offer its usual medals and certificates. However, this matter never came before the regular January meeting of the society, owing, I guess, to an oversight. I feel it is of such importance that I would recommend that at this meeting the officers be authorized to carry out the intent of this resolution, or that at least some action be taken toward such coöperation. For the more we can increase the exhibits of carnations the more we can popularize the flowers.

I would recommend, also, that the secretary be authorized to place an advertisement in each of the trade papers when the premium schedule is ready, calling attention to the fact that premium lists are to be had for the application, and asking those who are not members to include the membership fee, so as to be eligible to exhibit.



Words of Thanks.

I believe such publicity will not only help us to get more exhibitors, but also new members. On behalf of the society I want to extend thanks to the trade press for the vast amount of free publicity given the carnation whenever opportunity presented itself.

In closing I want to heartily thank the secretary, Mr. Baur, for his kind coöperation and advice in many things; also Mr. Vesey, our worthy vice-president, for his untiring efforts in leading on the preliminary work of this meeting and

Early in the year the secretary, by direction of the board of directors, solicited funds from the members for the Mothers' Day fund which was being raised by the Society of American Florists, for the purpose of assisting Miss Jarvis in promoting that day. As a result, $154 was raised and sent to Secretary Young.

The board of directors held the customary post-convention meeting January 27, in St. Louis. A second meeting was held in Philadelphia March 28, instead of the usual midsummer meeting. At this meeting some changes were made in the premiums offered in most of the classes contained in the premium schedule for this year's exhibition. In Section A, classes 1 to 11, the premiums were raised from $10 and $6 to $15 and $10. In Section B, classes 12 to 36, the premiums were raised from $5 and $3 to $8 and $5. In Section C only one premium, $10, is offered instead of $6 and $4. These changes have increased our liability on premiums by $219. Five disseminators have again generously contributed the premiums in Section C.

The identification badges you are wearing were provided as a result of the action taken in the meeting at St. Louis last year. They are the most practical article we were able to find for the purpose. If they are satisfactory, we will continue to use them.

The arrangements for this meeting were left entirely in the hands of our vice-president, W. J. Vesey, Jr., and his committees selected from the Indiana State Florists' Society. That they have labored earnestly and harmoniously you can see by the results accomplished. The retail men have again come forward with a splendid demonstration of the carnation's adaptability for decorative effects. They should be given credit and every encouragement possible.

THE PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL ADDRESS

The full text of the address of J. F. Ammann president of the American Carnation Society, delivered at the convention at Indianapolis, January 31, 1917.

AS presiding officer of this organization, that has so vastly advanced the interests not only of carnation culture, but floriculture in general, I deem it indeed an honor to welcome you to this, the twenty-sixth annual meeting of the American Carnation Society, in this beautiful and centrally located city of Indianapolis.

It is not necessary for me to repeat at this time the history of this organization. Suffice it to say that I feel more and more, as I grow older, the touch of good fellowship that a meeting like this brings with it.

Making Life Worth Living.

Here we commingle in brotherly love with fellow craftsmen from all over this fair land of peace and prosperity. Here we renew old acquaintances and make new ones. Now and then we miss an old, familiar face; we ask the reason, and find that he has passed on to the Great Beyond. As with the old varieties of our beloved carnations, we miss them, but never forget them! It is these fond greetings and memories that really make life worth living, after all.

To the members of our craft who are so diligently working to produce new varieties of merit, we are probably more indebted than we realize, for were it not for something new occasionally the public interest would soon wane. The American people are great on fads, and, in order to keep up an interest, new things of special merit are always in demand.

A Good Example.

I dare say nothing has popularized the rose so much the last few years as the coming on of so many new varieties of merit, and the end is not yet, which I am sure you will be convinced of in your visit to the E. G. Hill Co. place at Richmond. A friend recently told me it was worth a trip across the continent to see the seedling roses there, so I went and I now testify that the statement is true. We see here what one firm can do by untiring effort in roses. I contend the same must be done in carnations in order to keep this flower as popular in the future as it has been in the past.

Is Something Lacking?

Much, indeed, is being done along this line by quite a few of our trusty old friends, but what seems just at this time to be lacking in the new production of carnations is that they have not enough merit to replace many of the older varieties. Either they do not produce enough to be profitably grown as standards, or the quality is not good enough to command the extra price a fancy should. But all good things come to those who wait; so let us be patient and I am sure we shall soon be rewarded.

I have but a few suggestions to offer at this time. One recommendation I would offer is that the number of blooms necessary for a preliminary certificate for the Dorner memorial medal be changed from fifty to twenty five. It has been suggested that many times it is hard to get fifty good blooms from a new variety where not so many plants are grown.

We have an ever-growing demand for the society's coöperation with local flower shows; which I am sure we cannot afford to ignore. At the meeting of the board of directors in Cleveland November 12, 1915, a motion was passed to the effect that the board recommend to the convention following in January that the A. C. S. lend its coöperation to local flower shows, provided the schedule, the judges and the underwriting of said show be approved by the president and secretary of this society.

To Encourage Exhibitors.

I take it that the intention was to have the society offer its usual medals and certificates. However, this matter never came before the regular January meeting of the society, owing, I guess, to an oversight. I feel it is of such importance that I would recommend that at this meeting the officers be authorized to carry out the intent of this resolution, or that at least some action be taken toward such coöperation. For the more we can increase the exhibits of carnations the more we can popularize the flowers.

I would recommend, also, that the secretary be authorized to place an advertisement in each of the trade papers when the premium schedule is ready, calling attention to the fact that premium lists are to be had for the application, and asking those who are not members to include the membership fee, so as to be eligible to exhibit.

Words of Thanks.

I believe such publicity will not only help us to get more exhibitors, but also new members. On behalf of the society I want to extend thanks to the trade press for the vast amount of free publicity given the carnation whenever opportunity presented itself.

In closing I want to heartily thank the secretary, Mr. Baur, for his kind coöperation and advice in many things; also Mr. Vesey, our worthy vice-president, for his untiring efforts in leading on the preliminary work of this meeting and show. To the local committees, and especially to the exhibitors, I feel deeply grateful for their hearty coöperation in helping to bring about this creditable show. To the members of this society I feel much indebted for the honor conferred upon me in my unanimous election as your president. I assure you, gentlemen, it will ever bring to me fond memories of your friendship in years to come, and my good wishes and prayers will be with you always.

SOME SEASONABLE NOTES.

Bedding Geraniums.

Grow the fall-propagated geraniums cool and maintain a dry atmosphere. Space the plants apart from time to time, in order to keep them stocky and at the same time reduce the number of decaying leaves. Give plenty of fresh air on all possible occasions. Do any necessary potting before the plants become too matted with roots. If they get into this condition, be sure to use a pointed stick and scratch the ball a little in order to loosen the roots before potting. Never pot geraniums, or for that matter any other plants, while the balls are dry. You want plants which will make a short-jointed, firm and stocky growth, and in order to secure this be careful not to use any fresh manure in the soil. If you can get some old, well pulverized manure, such as is obtainable from the bottom of an old hotbed, and use one-fourth of this to three-fourths of loam, it will answer well. Add a dash of fine bone to it and pot firmly. If you pot loosely the plants will make a softer growth. If you happen to grow mushrooms, the manure from an old mushroom bed will be found just the thing for geraniums.

Of course you propagated geraniums heavily in the fall, but you may wish to increase your stock. If so, take the tops from the strongest plants, pot singly in small pots in sandy loam and stand them where they can get a little bottom heat. Water well at first, but more sparingly later, until the cuttings are rooted. Such cuttings can go in for the next month or more and will make nice 3-inch pot stock for late spring sales, but of course will not produce as large plants as are obtained from fall cuttings. When you have taken the cuttings, let the plants run somewhat dry for a few days until they break away again; then water more freely. Throw away any diseased plants, and if a batch of them shows round blotches on the foliage, watch them carefully. This trouble is quite prevalent at this season. It is a safe plan to spray with Fungine or Bordeaux mixture as soon as it appears. The trouble is most likely to appear on plants which are grown warm and which have become soft in a too moist atmosphere. Keep water off the foliage all you can and see that debris is not thrown below the benches.

Standard Geraniums.

A correspondent asks how he can produce standard or tree geraniums. It takes rather longer to grow these than ordinary bedding plants and, of course, a good price must be got for them. Select vigorous young plants which have not been pinched. Rub off all side shoots. Use a stake for each plant, to keep the stems as straight as possible. Pinch off all flowers and all side shoots as they appear and pot on as it becomes necessary. When the plants have reached the height desired, which should be from eighteen to thirty inches, pinch out the top and it will break out in several places. The new shoots, in turn, will need pinching from time to time until you build up a good head. Be sure to use a good stake in each pot, to hold the stems and heads securely. The stake should rise a little above the point where the head starts to branch. You will have nice standards by fall, and if kept somewhat dry over winter they ought to command an excellent price the next season.

In addition to geraniums, standards of fuchsias, lantanas, hydrangeas, heliotropes, marguerites, in the white varieties, and other plants may be grown in the same way. Grown in this way, such plants prove to be attractive features at exhibitions and in store windows. They are also fine for dotting at intervals in flower beds, with lower-growing plants below them.

Winter-flowering Geraniums.

Any time from now until March 1 is a suitable time to take cuttings of geraniums wanted for winter blooming. Of course it is possible to propagate even as late as May 1 and still have plants in 4-inch pots for Thanksgiving or Christmas trade. Such plants, however, are rather too small. Propagated now, they will flower in 6-inch pots, and if kept potted on, given one or two necessary pinches and grown under glass through the summer, such plants should carry for the holidays anywhere from six to fifteen open trusses of flowers each, and there will be no trouble in selling them. Singles are more floriferous in winter than doubles and are best for home trade, but for shipping it will be necessary to grow semi-doubles and doubles. Of course the bright colors are what people will mostly buy, but try a few of the apricot or salmon-orange tints in addition.

Scented Geraniums.

Every garden should contain some scented plants; in fact, some gardens are now being planted with nothing but plants with scented leaves or flowers. Scented geraniums and lemon verbenas continue to retain their popularity in this field. The more robust-growing scented geraniums are of easy propagation and make sizable plants more rapidly than the ordinary bedding ones. If you have fewer plants than you think you can sell, take more cuttings now. Practically every cutting should root and all will make nice, bushy plants in 4-inch pots before the sales of bedding plants start.

GERANIUMS WILL NOT FLOWER.

I am sending you another diseased geranium, with the hope that it will not be frozen in transit. The foliage of the plant, as you will notice, is puckered. I have about 100 plants in 4-inch pots. They are thrifty as to growth, but I have been informed that they will not bloom. Do you think my informant is correct? Of course, if the plants cannot bloom I want to throw them out. Buchner seems to be the only variety in this diseased condition.

H. M. M.—Ill.

The geranium plant came through in good condition. The leaves were much puckered, as you say. This is really a disease, but I do not know its name. It is a fact that plants with such foliage, while they will bloom a little, are quite unsatisfactory, and you would be well advised in throwing them away. I would be particular not to propagate from any plants thus affected.

GERANIUMS FOR MEMORIAL.

I have one batch of geraniums which I think have grown too high. They were started in October and now are in 2½-inch pots and are about six inches high. I have nipped the tips and they show signs of sprouting. Would it be best to let them continue as they are, or shall I cut them off and reroot them? The variety is red, like Helen Michell. My other geraniums are in 2½-inch pots and have about filled the pots with roots. Shall I shift them to 3-inch pots now, or wait another month? I want them in 4-inch pots for Decoration day.

R. E.—O.

You should have allowed the geraniums to grow sufficiently large so that you could secure a cutting from each, instead of pinching the tops out. It is not wise to pot at the same time as pinching is done, but as your plants are breaking you should pot them at once in 3-inch pots. They can stand in their pots about six weeks; then move them into 4-inch pots. Always shift the plants before the balls become too matted with roots. C. W.

A Big Design for a Town Marshal's Funeral.

BLUECOAT'S STAR IN FLOWERS.

The ambitious retailer or designer who is inclined to favor the ancient saw that "a man should 'do' a thing in his brain before he does it with his hands," will find a moment's food for thought in the idea depicted in the accompanying illustration. The design represented typifies a comparatively new notion in funeral work, that of searching out some event or circumstance in the life of the decedent and embodying it as the dominant feature of the design, by floral representation.

For instance, at the funeral of a soldier lad who was killed while serving his country on the Mexican border the principal floral tribute was a replica in flowers of the United States flag; at the grave of a noted violinist there was an elaborate pedestal of flowers supporting a "violin" of flowers. The design in the illustration was a tribute to the police chief of Covington, O., who was killed by a man resisting arrest. The marshal had served his community for seventeen years and was unusually well liked for an officer of the law.

Petersime & Son, of Covington, who designed this piece for the town's business men, employed the marshal's badge or star as the motif of the decoration. The arrangement was eleven feet in circumference. The "star" was made of white carnations, white roses, Easter lilies and white sweet peas. The circle was formed with pink carnations and roses, rubrum lilies, pink sweet peas and Easter lilies. Boxwood and plumosus were used for the green backing.

Of course, there are rewards for those who now and then rebel against the conventional arrangements in funeral designs. A little brains added to the designer's art is bound to please the man who pays the bills and in most cases makes possible a substantial charge for "knowledge of the business."

HARDY FLOWERS FOR DESIGNS.

Kindly advise me what hardy plants suitable for design work would be profitable to grow. I am often short of stock in the summer.

H. E. H.—W. Va.

The following plants would prove useful to you: Physostegia Virginiana and P. Virginiana alba; Lathyrus latifolius Pink Beauty and White Pearl, both climbing varieties; Clematis recta fl. pl.; Euphorbia corollata; Gypsophila paniculata and the double form, flore pleno; Chrysanthemum maximum, or Shasta daisies, King Edward VII and Mrs. C. Daniels; Boltonia latisquama and asteroides; Pyrthrum uliginosum; Aster umbellatus, White Queen, Perry's Pink and Dainty; Artemisia lactiflora; Delphinium Chinense and D. Chinense album; Phlox Elizabeth Campbell, F. G. Von Lassburg and Le Cygne.

ST. VALENTINE'S DAY

A TRADE-MADE FLOWER DAY.

The Work of Four Years.

Four years is a long while to wait for anything, but in the history of a trade four years is only a brief time for the creation, development and firm establishing of another special flower day. Those who were in the trade in 1912 will recall that five years ago St. Valentine's day was without significance for florists.

Indeed, the development of St. Valentine's day is one of the best examples of what florists can do for themselves, once they have their attention called to the opportunity.

How It Started.

Read up on St. Valentine's day and you will find its origin lost in the mists of antiquity. Since time immemorial it has been the day on which brave men have sent fair ladies fond tokens. But it was not until 1913 that any attempt was made to cause the use of flowers as valentines. January 30, 1913, The Review published a St. Valentine's Day Number in which it was conspicuously stated:

The purpose of this issue is to get 10,000 florists each to do at least a little something to attract the attention of the public to the appropriateness of flowers for use as valentines.

That was the real beginning of St. Valentine's day from a florists' flower selling point of view.

That issue of The Review pointed out an opportunity—and showed how to take advantage of it. It illustrated the methods by which the few retailers who had tried to do something with the day had made two dollars come in where only one dollar came in before, and it showed pictures of the corsage bouquets and packages that seemed likely to be the readiest sellers.

Everybody Doing It Now.

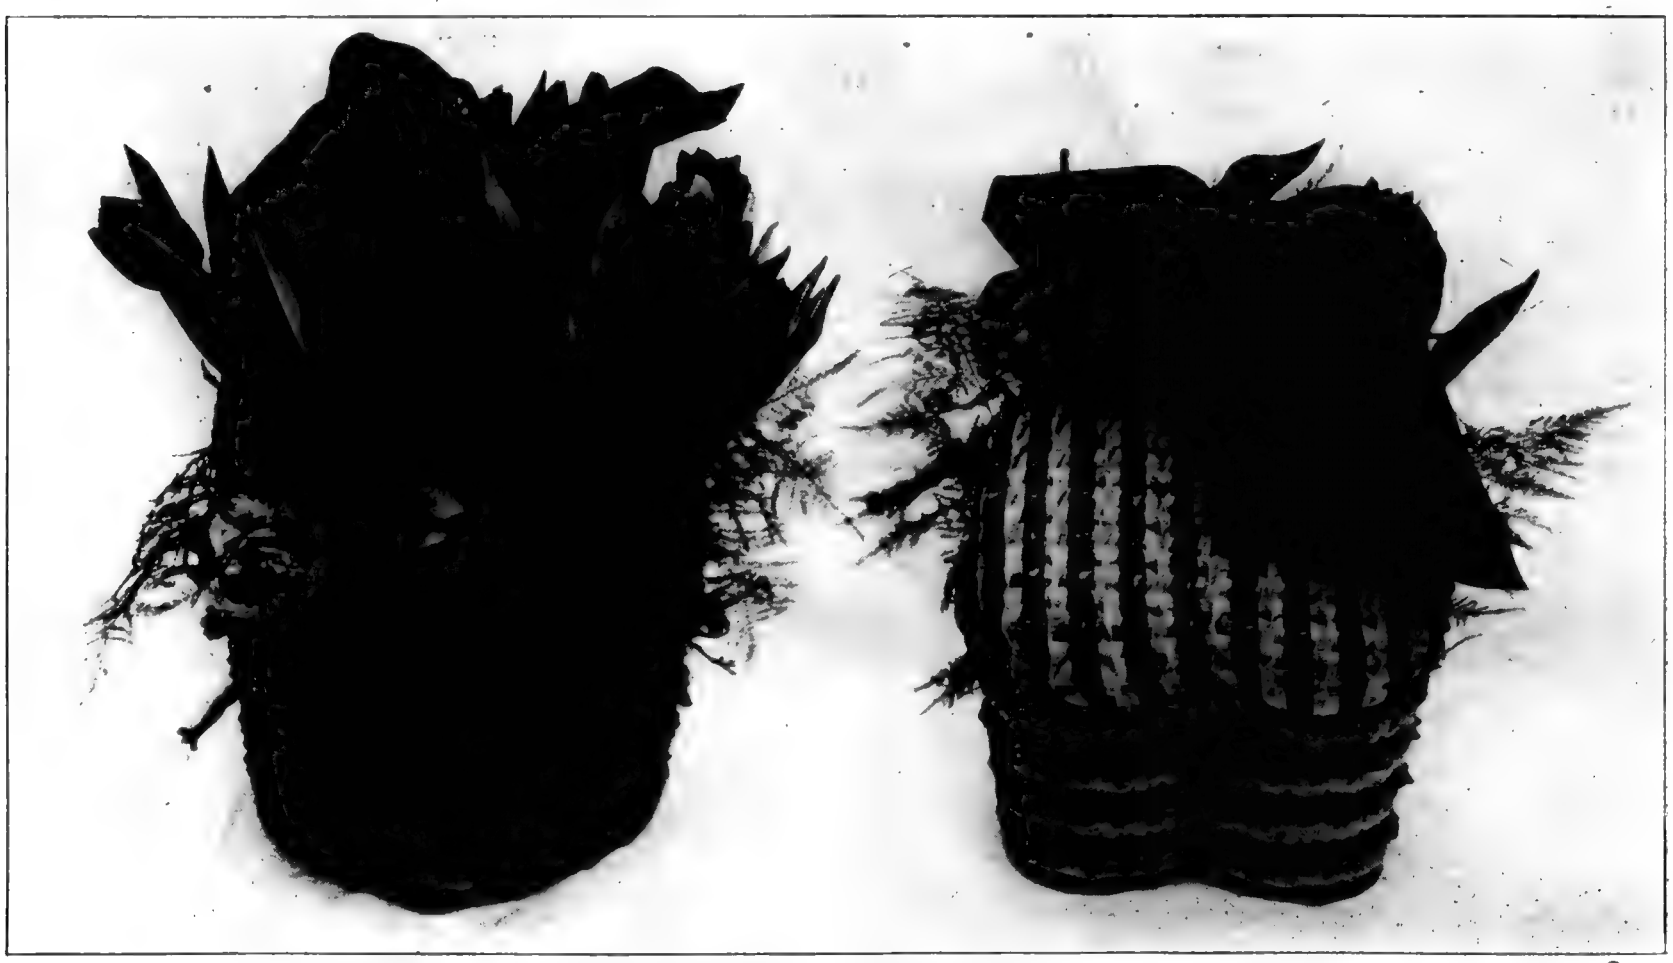
Perhaps that 1913 St. Valentine's Number of The Review fell short of its purpose to get 10,000 florists to push flowers for use as valentines, but the results really were surprising. Literally thousands took up the work and the way St. Valentine's day sales jumped is matter of common knowledge.

After only four years we find everybody advertising flowers for St. Valentine's day. It has paid splendidly, for it has been demonstrated that, as The Review said in its first St. Valentine's Day Number, "all the public needs is the suggestion to send flowers."

Although the St. Valentine's day demand for flowers is based on an ancient custom, it is a special flower day of the trade's own making; it affords a splendid illustration of the results that follow united effort. It has come to pass because a large number of individuals each has done and is "doing his bit" for his own individual good and the sum of the effort makes a push that makes the flower business boom.

ADS AND WINDOWS.

The Bright Displays.



If any florist neglects to decorate his window with a special display for St. Valentine's day he will pass up one of the best chances of the season, for it pays, pays directly, pays tangibly and immediately. Also, it is easy, for hearts and flowers go together and with the red heart in the window the message is easy to get across.

The St. Valentine's window decoration shown on page 25 is to give an idea capable of many variations. This was the 1916 window of the Spokane Florist Co., of Spokane, Wash., and it paid handsomely for the not great special effort and the small extra expense involved. The suggestion, "Let your valentine be flowers," should not be omitted.

Newspaper Ads.

At Washington, D. C., and in many other cities, it has proved splendidly effective for the florists to get together on a large newspaper advertisement such as the one reproduced on page 27. This is shown, not as an example of good copy, for it might be improved, but as an illustration of a method which has brought splendid results at small cost to the individual. It is worth doing in any town where there are three or more florists willing to work together for the general good of the business.

Of individual advertising there is no end—on the whole it is the best means of increasing the sales of flowers. In any town where the florists use newspaper space to an extent that will make an impression on the public the flower business is sure to be in a healthy condition. Intelligently used, individual advertising is the greatest power thus far discovered for the improvement of business. But usually the cost of the individual St. Valentine's day advertisement is much greater than would be the individual subscription to a cooperative flower advertisement. In the original the Fleischman advertisement reproduced on page 28 was over fourteen inches long and three columns wide; it measured 600 agate lines in a paper that charges 30 cents to 40 cents per line. It probably cost the florist $200 and an equal space will cost more this year, for advertising rates, like everything else, have gone up in the newspapers that were not charging

Another Way.

The Chicago Florists' Club has developed another coöperative plan this season, involving the use of red heart-shaped stickers which are being sold to a large number of florists at about cost by a committee of the club. The idea is to use them on parcels, on letters, bills and everything else that goes out the few days before St. Valentine's day. It is a plan that lets every florist participate in the good work, as 100 stickers can be had for 75 cents.

PERENNIALS FROM SEED.

Next spring I intend to sow a quantity of perennial seeds, and would like some advice from you. How many plants can be grown by one man with hired help at the transplanting time? Can I sow enough perennial seeds to produce 600,000 plants and sell them the next spring through advertisements in The Review? Can one reasonably expect to sell that many? Can the seed be sown out in the field and later transplanted and mulched for winter? Of course no plants could be sold during the frozen up time, when other nurseries sell.

Would it be better to give the plants pot culture? I am afraid that if I grow them in pots and winter them in frames I could not have many, as I have a frame only ninety feet long. If I could give the plants field culture, what kinds and how much fertilizer should be applied per acre on the average New England soil, at the time of seed sowing and at transplanting time? It would be quite difficult for me to procure manure.

Of the following, state which are the most suitable and which are peculiar in the germination of their seeds: Achilleas, dianthus, digitalis, geums, alyssums, gaillardias, gypsophilas, aquilegias, hibiscus, hollyhocks, campanulas, lupinus, lychnis, centaureas, pentstemons, physostegias, chrysanthemums, platycodons, delphiniums, tritomas, stokesias, sweet williams, poppies, pyrethrums.

F. A. H.—Mass.

It would be a large contract to raise, transplant and dispose of as many as 600,000 hardy plants in a season. If you included pansies, double daisies and forget-me-nots, it would be more nearly possible. These three popular spring and summer-blooming plants would all winter outdoors with you, provided you have a gentle slope on your land, which would ensure good drainage and remove any possibility of water standing about the plants. These plants should be sown from July 20 to August 5, and they could be started advantageously in your coldframe where necessary water and shade could be afforded to start them.

One man undoubtedly could handle a large number of plants, but I doubt if he could care for 600,000 properly. The Review sells many millions of plants annually, and if any paper could sell your plants The Review certainly could. Plants in pots have some advantages. It requires a lot of labor to do the needful potting, and watering is no inconsiderable factor, but it is possible to dispose of this stock long after the sales season for field-grown plants has ended. The paper pots offered by several concerns have many advantages over the earthenware ones. If you never have grown any of this class of plants before, I would counsel you not to plunge too heavily the first season. Grow moderate quantities. Find out what people really will buy, then go ahead on a larger scale the following season.

While all the plants you name can be sown outdoors, I would prefer to start them in a coldframe, where they could get better attention. If you only had a greenhouse it would pay to start a number of seeds now. Failing this, I would sow the majority in June. The following come up quickly and are easy of culture: Dianthus, digitalis, gaillardias, gypsophilas, hollyhocks, hibiscus, campanulas, especially C. Medium; lupines, centaureas, geums, chrysanthemums, especially the Shasta daisy section; alyssums, delphiniums, sweet williams, which are a form of dianthus; poppies and pyrethrums. These following varieties come a little more slowly: Tritomas, stokesias, aquilegias, physostegias and platycodons. None of these, however, are difficult subjects to start. Care has to be taken to select suitable weather for transplanting, and there

It would be quite difficult for me to procure manure.

Of the following, state which are the most suitable and which are peculiar in the germination of their seeds: Achilleas, dianthus, digitalis, geums, alyssums, gaillardias, gypsophilas, aquilegias, hibiscus, hollyhocks, campanulas, lupinus, lychnis, centaureas, pentstemons, physostegias, chrysanthemums, platycodons, delphiniums, tritomas, stokesias, sweet williams, poppies, pyrethrums.

F. A. H.—Mass.

It would be a large contract to raise, transplant and dispose of as many as 600,000 hardy plants in a season. If you included pansies, double daisies and forget-me-nots, it would be more nearly possible. These three popular spring and summer-blooming plants would all winter outdoors with you, provided you have a gentle slope on your land, which would ensure good drainage and remove any possibility of water standing about the plants. These plants should be sown from July 20 to August 5, and they could be started advantageously in your coldframe where necessary water and shade could be afforded to start them.

One man undoubtedly could handle a large number of plants, but I doubt if he could care for 600,000 properly. The Review sells many millions of plants annually, and if any paper could sell your plants The Review certainly could. Plants in pots have some advantages. It requires a lot of labor to do the needful potting, and watering is no inconsiderable factor, but it is possible to dispose of this stock long after the sales season for field-grown plants has ended. The paper pots offered by several concerns have many advantages over the earthenware ones. If you never have grown any of this class of plants before, I would counsel you not to plunge too heavily the first season. Grow moderate quantities. Find out what people really will buy, then go ahead on a larger scale the following season.

While all the plants you name can be sown outdoors, I would prefer to start them in a coldframe, where they could get better attention. If you only had a greenhouse it would pay to start a number of seeds now. Failing this, I would sow the majority in June. The following come up quickly and are easy of culture: Dianthus, digitalis, gaillardias, gypsophilas, hollyhocks, hibiscus, campanulas, especially C. Medium; lupines, centaureas, geums, chrysanthemums, especially the Shasta daisy section; alyssums, delphiniums, sweet williams, which are a form of dianthus; poppies and pyrethrums. These following varieties come a little more slowly: Tritomas, stokesias, aquilegias, physostegias and platycodons. None of these, however, are difficult subjects to start. Care has to be taken to select suitable weather for transplanting, and there are some years when but few suitable days occur for this work.

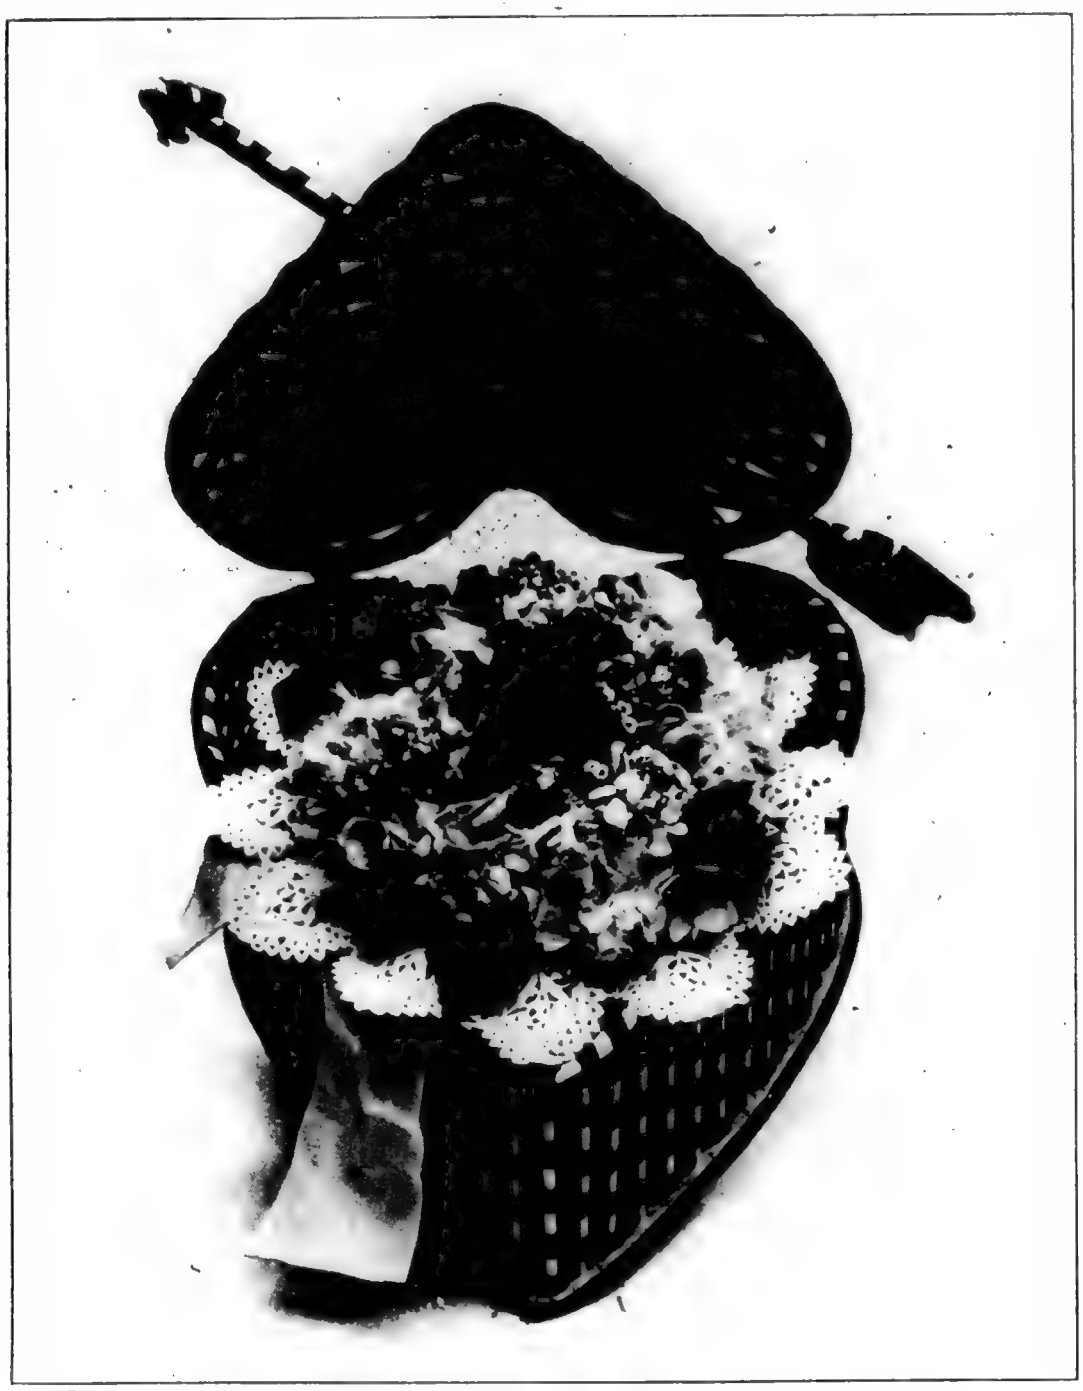
If you can secure barnyard manure, it is far superior as fertilizer for your plants. Broadcast this at the rate of eight to ten cords per acre. If you can use even a smaller amount of barnyard manure, and supplement it with fertilizer, it will answer well. I would suggest applying 600 pounds of finely ground bone per acre. This would give both nitrogen and phosphoric acid. As high-grade forms of potash are at present quite expensive, I would use 1,000 pounds of unleached wood ashes to help out on that end. It would take a large and special article to cover your questions fully. C. W.



SEASONABLE SUGGESTIONS

Cyclamens.

If you sowed seeds of cyclamens last August, as advised, your plants should now be growing well in flats and probably a good many of them have attained sufficient size to be moved into 3-inch pots. Use a light soil, consisting of equal parts of flaky leaf-mold and loam, with some sand added. After potting, place them in a temperature of 55 degrees at night on a bench well up to the light. Encourage later plants to grow by frequently stirring the surface soil in the flats. Old plants which were late for Christmas can, if necessary, be held in a cold house for Easter. A temperature of 40 degrees at night will suffice for these. Cyclamens are popular plants, however, and there is a fairly steady call for them all through the winter.

Genistas.

About February 1 is a good time to house genista plants wanted in bloom at Easter. It is well to bring in a few of the plants from time to time. They are good sellers either at the greenhouse or store and are more quickly grown into salable plants than ericas, camellias, acacias and other hard-wooded plants. It must be confessed that genistas as house plants can scarcely be called a success. If allowed to become dry at the root or even if most carefully tended, they only stand a few days in the average steam-heated house. Still, a genista plant will cost no more than a dozen roses of good quality and more frequently than not a single day will end the roses' usefulness.

A Red Heart-shaped Hamper Containing a Colonial Bouquet.

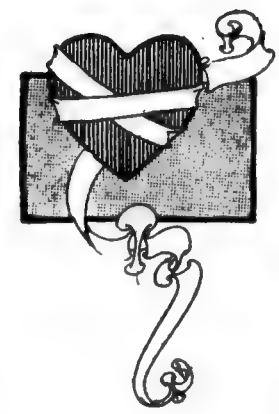
Asters.

Last summer asters proved a sad failure over a large part of the country, owing to the excessive rainfalls in the early summer, and as a result prices ruled much higher than usual in the various flower markets. During the last year or two growers have in a number of cases devoted houses to their culture and last season asters paid much better than chrysanthemums. When grown under glass, the plants are immune from the ailments affecting outdoor stock and the flowers, of course, are not battered by rain storms. As a consequence indoor flowers bring a higher price than outdoor ones. For anyone who will have a vacant house just after Easter, aster growing can be safely recommended. Sow the seed now; transplant the seedlings into flats and from these plant them out in the benches. A soil such as you would use for chrysanthemums will suit them. Sow an early variety; Queen of the Market is the best. White is the best selling color; next, pink and lavender. There is a small sale for other colors. If you plant an early variety your house will be cleared in time to sow a crop of sweet peas or to plant violets, snapdragons or even carnations.

Fuchsias.

If you have a few old fuchsia plants which have been carried over winter in a semi-dormant state, place such stock in a warm house, spray freely and they will soon give quantities of nice, succulent cuttings, which will root readily in a cutting bench. Pot into 2½-inch pots and later into 4-inch pots. One pinching will be all they will need. Fuchsias bed out and do remarkably well in partial shade and are quite satisfactory for piazza work. Such varieties as Trailing Queen make wonderful basket plants, flowering practically the whole summer. Fuchsias should not be grown in a higher temperature than 50 degrees at night. Plants kept over until a second year and grown either as pyramids or standards make splendid stock for decorative purposes, but are all too seldom seen.

Stevias.



The flowering season for stevias will soon be over and these notes will serve as a reminder not to throw away all your stock plants. Keep a sufficient number for cuttings. Head these back and as soon as a nice lot of shoots have appeared place them in the propagating bench. Later the tops can be taken from these cuttings and the old plants can be thrown away. Probably more dwarf than tall stevias are grown. On the whole, I prefer the tall variety, which has longer and better branched stems.

Spiræas for Easter.

The white spiræas, or astilbes, force into flower more quickly than the pink ones. The old Japonica comes in earlier than all others, but is not now

For St. Valentine's Day Give Flowers

As the legend goes, St. Valentine's Day dates back to the time of Emperor Claudius of Rome, though probably the custom of making sentimental gifts on this day was stimulated by the following, from—

Shakespeare: Hamlet iv, 5

"Tomorrow is St. Valentine's Day
All in the morning betime,
And I a maid at your window
To be your Valentine."

The Florists of Washington

Make special preparations for this day.

The expression of one's thoughts through presents of Flowers has greatly increased from year to year. Flowers breathe the very atmosphere of finer sentiment and add a true sense of the beautiful to the purpose of a gift.

Dainty Bouquets of Cut Flowers, Artistic Baskets of Cut Flowers, Growing Flowers and Ferns will be found at all Floral Shops at prices that will enable one and all to gratify their wishes in the sending of appropriate remembrances of—grown to the same extent as formerly, such varieties as Gladstone and astilboides having displaced it. All these varieties should be started at once in a temperature of 60 degrees. They will need a good heat and an abundant water supply. Queen Alexandra and Peach Blossom are fine peach-pink sorts, which should also be started at once. They sell better than the white varieties, but do not force so rapidly or so well. For that reason many prefer to hold them until Memorial day for cutting.

QUITCH GRASS IN LAWN.

Enclosed you will find a piece of root of a weed that is covering the lawn in my charge. What is the best way to get rid of this? The lawn is newly made and evidently the man who did the grading did not pick out any of this grass. I would like to know if there is any way of getting rid of it without plowing the lawn, as there is about ten acres of it. A. D. L.—Mass.

This pestilent grass weed is botanically known as Agropyron repens and commonly known as witch grass, quack grass, quitch grass, quick grass or twitch grass. If your lawn is full of it you cannot possibly clean it out without plowing and giving the weed thorough cultivation through the summer, raking off and burning all roots brought to the surface. You should be able to get rid of the grass by August, which is the best month in the year to seed down lawns in your state. This grass can also be subdued in great measure by growing a heavy smother crop on the land, such as fodder corn, oats, rye, millet or cowpeas, but persistent cultivation for a season after plowing would be your best remedy.

Some farmers consider this a valuable grass for hay. It will certainly thrive where most other grasses fail. It has some value for reënforcing banks that wash badly, but a lawn is no place for it. C. W.

PROPAGATION OF ECHEVERIAS.

I would like your advice as to the treatment, culture and propagation of echeverias. Are they considered profitable bedding plants?

M. E. H.—Tenn.

Lift the echeveria plants from the garden before it becomes too cold and damp in the fall. Pack the plants in boxes of sand, in which they winter best. Echeverias are best if propagated soon after the old stock is housed, from October 15 to January 1. Twist off the leaves carefully, so as to bring a dormant eye with each. The leaf without an eye will root, but will never produce a plant. It requires about a month to root the leaves in a warm cutting bench. While in the sand give the plantings little water, or they will damp. Transplant the leaves into flats as soon as they are rooted. Water the plants sparingly while they are in the flats. Plants of sufficient size to bed out in May can be had if propagation is done before January 1. There is a fair profit in growing echeverias, but I should say less than in the case of many other bedding plants. C. W.

LONGIFLORUM BULBS DISEASED.

We are sending you two lily bulbs which, as you will notice, are rotten on the bottom. This rot destroys the roots, and we would like to know the cause of it. We have other lilies of the same variety in the same house, obtained from a different seedsman, which are not affected. The plants have not had too much water. We have had to throw out about two-thirds of this batch. L. A. E. & S.—O.

The most probable cause of the trouble is the digging of the bulbs in an immature condition. Or perhaps these bulbs were frozen in transit, which would seriously hurt them. Whenever bulbs throw up feeble growths with curling foliage, you can make up your mind at once that they are of no value whatever. C. W.

DUTCH BULBS

BULB GROWING IN HOLLAND.

[This is the second installment of a paper read at a recent meeting of the Cleveland Florists' Club, in Cleveland, O., by John Van Leeuwen, of Sassenheim, Holland. In describing the methods of bulb culture used in Holland, Mr. Van Leeuwen confined his remarks to three groups of plants, hyacinths, tulips and narcissi. The first section of his paper had reference to hyacinths and was published in The Review of January 25. The present section treats of tulips. The remainder of the paper, with narcissi as the subject, will appear in a later issue of The Review.]

The different species of tulips are found wild along the northern shores of the Mediterranean, in Armenia, the Levant, the Caucasus district, Persia, and sporadically across north and central Asia as far as Japan.

The old Duc van Thol varieties are derived from Tulipa suaveolens, a native of the Caspian region, while the other kinds are mostly seedlings of Tulipa Gesneriana, which was introduced from the Levant in 1577 and two years later was brought from Constantinople to Augsburg by Conrad Gesner.

The name "tulip" was probably taken from the Turkish word "tulbend," a turban, with reference to the shape of the flower.

An Ancient Craze for Tulips.

It was not long before tulips became exceedingly popular—so much so that in the early part of the seventeenth century a regular craze broke out in Holland. In Haarlem one can still find a stone on which is inscribed simply the date, 1637. This stone was kept as a remembrance of the famous tulip trade of the year 1637, "when, one fool hatched from another, the people were rich without substance and wise without knowledge."

Wild tales are abundant about what was paid for one tulip. For a single bulb twelve acres of land in the Schermer polder were offered. One variety, Semper Augustus, must have been the rarest and most costly of all, as the fabulous price of $5,500 is said to have been once paid for it, and soon afterward three of these bulbs were again sold for $12,000.

The price of land and the rent of fields in which to grow the bulbs became extremely high. One gentleman was offered $20,000 a year for his field for seven years and in addition a share of the profits.

Speculation and Extravagance.

The rage developed to such a stage that nearly every inn and tavern around Haarlem was turned into a bulb exchange, where bulbs were bought and sold long before they were taken from the ground. In each of these places a bookkeeper was employed, who kept a record of every transaction and of the profits made, which in most cases seemed extraordinarily high.

Many men, unused to such wealth, became exceedingly extravagant, spending money lavishly and beyond their incomes, buying carriages and horses and living at such a rate as only possessors of untold wealth could afford.

What many a wise man had foreseen, at last happened. Everyone having become a bulb grower, so many tulips were crowded into the market that prices suddenly dropped. A great many buyers refused to take the bulbs at the price agreed upon, and a good many disputes and quarrels arose. Finally the States General of Holland issued a decree that, beginning April 27, 1636, tulip sellers had the right to force buyers to accept the bulbs at the prices agreed upon. The decree stopped the speculation to such an extent that a Semper Augustus, for instance, for which previously several thousand dollars had been paid, now brought only $20. Many people were ruined.

Modern Tulip Fields.

Even though the craze ruined numbers of people, many kept on growing them, and today one can see miles and miles of tulips in bloom when traveling through our district in April and May.

Tulips do not absolutely require the same soil which we use for hyacinths. We grow tulips in clay and even in peat soil. It must be said, though, that tulips grown in sand will produce the best results in general.

When grown in sand the tulips are planted in the same place from which the hyacinths were taken earlier in the season. The ground is manured with about two bushels of cow manure to the square rod. Of course a good deal of the manure which was used for the hyacinths is still in the soil. The bulbs are planted in the same way as the hyacinths. The beds are covered with a light layer of new, long reeds. This is not done to protect them from frost, as tulips do not suffer from frost, but to shield them from the winds in the spring.

Harvesting and Marketing.

When the bulbs are ripe they are dug and taken to the bulb houses, where they are spread out thinly on the shelves. They get plenty of air, so as to dry them quickly, while care is taken that the sun does not shine on them, because then the skin bursts. Tulips propagate themselves, and the old mother bulb splits into two to five smaller bulbs, leaving only a lot of old, dry skin.

As soon as the bulbs are dry we hire a lot of women and girls to clean them. When this is done the bulbs are run through a sorting machine, which sorts them in about ten different sizes. The selling size is then put on a table and picked over by hand. The bulbs are, after that, counted into bags of 250 and 500, according to the variety. The bags are put on shelves and left there until we pack them in cases to be shipped abroad.

Present Popularity of Tulips.

There is no disease in tulips, and of all the bulbs we grow they are probably the easiest of culture. They are much more popular than hyacinths, probably on account of the fact that they have such a long blooming season and can therefore be put to so many more uses.

Among the great acquisitions are the Darwins, of which no one knows the origin, and lately the breeders have come to the front again. They are nothing new. They are the unbroken forms of the old florists' tulip, and the old Dutch gardeners discarded them because a tulip had no value for them unless the flower was either striped or feathered. Here and there in old, forgotten corners, breeders are found and greedily taken up by the present growers. They are truly magnificent flowers.

The stems are tall and strong, while the flowers reach immense sizes and are of lasting quality. Their coloring is odd, ranging between maroon, purple and terra cotta.

CALLA BLOOMS TURN BROWN.

Please tell me what causes calla blooms to turn brown at the edges before they are fully open. H. H.—Colo.

A heavy dose of liquid manure as the flowers start to expand, given during dark weather which is followed by a clear, sunny day, often causes the flowers to turn brown at the edges. You cannot use any safer food for callas than fine ground bone. Give the plants a top-dressing of bone once in ten days. It is really surprising to note how greedily the roots devour this food. C. W.

ASPARAGUS GROWN TOO COLD.

I have seven solid beds of Asparagus plumosus plants, which are growing unsatisfactorily. Last September I loosened the soil thoroughly and gave the beds a good top-dressing of cow manure. Subsequently I gave a light dressing of lime, thinking that the soil was old and perhaps sour, but this also failed to help the plants. I run the beds neither too dry nor too wet and maintain a temperature of 50 to 65 degrees. Should I give the plants more water? Is there a special food for asparagus? Should I change the top soil? Some plants in new beds behave similarly.
J. G. K.—Ind.

So far as I can judge from this report, it seems most likely that the asparagus is being grown too cold. This crop is seldom satisfactory when grown in a temperature lower than 60 degrees at night, and better results are secured by holding the night temperature at 65 degrees and by giving the plants an abundance of water both overhead and at the root.

When using a dressing of lime on the soil, it is better to apply it sometime previous to mulching, and to wash the lime in with a good watering before putting on the manure, for lime on the manure is likely to liberate some of the ammonia and thus reduce the fertilizer value. W. H. T.

ASTERS GOOD BUT SLOW.

I have a bed of sweet peas that seem to be affected with root-rot. Would it be all right to plant the bed to asters? If so, what varieties shall I use and when shall I put them in? Would the late-branching kind be the best? It is a good, solid bed and the soil is rich.
B. B. C.—Kan.

Asters should do well and should make a good paying crop. Sow seeds now of Queen of the Market, also called Queen of the Earlies. Sow the seeds in flats, later transplant into other flats and plant out from these. The late-branching asters would not pay you so well as Queen of the Market. You might also try a batch of Comet. White and pink are the best colors.

If your peas are badly diseased and must be thrown out at once, there necessarily must be a long season when your house will net you nothing. You could sow ten weeks' stocks now and have a Memorial day crop; or there is candytuft. You could procure plants of double feverfew or snapdragons, which would also net good profits at that time. It is not a good policy to put all the eggs in one basket, so why not sow part of the house with asters and the remainder with some other flower crop that would yield you an earlier return? Why not grow a crop of radishes where the asters are to go? They would be out of the way before your asters were ready and would net you a nice sum.

WHO'S WHO IN THE TRADE—AND WHY

A. J. McNUTT.

THOUGH A. J. McNutt once temporarily abandoned the trade, his "absence made his heart grow fonder" and he renewed his horticultural efforts with a resolute energy that scorned difficulties. Note the decisive steps in his progress: Born in Knox county, Tennessee, July 26, 1875; followed his father's occupation of market gardening until after his marriage, in 1895; worked at the business of candy making for five years; returned to the soil, determined to succeed; built his first greenhouse in 1902, making lettuce his main crop; gradually substituted flowers for vegetables, until, in 1913, he was growing flowers only; in February, 1916, purchased the greenhouse establishment of Chas. W. Crouch, at Knoxville, one of the largest ranges in the south; remodeled the Crouch store in elegant and modern fashion. He has served as secretary-treasurer and as president of the Knoxville Florists' Society.

TILE BENCHES.

As we are contemplating a change from wood benches to tile, we would like to know what you think of tile bottoms. Are tile benches satisfactory for growing roses and carnations?
W. R. W.

Tile benches are suitable for growing any crop that will grow on wooden benches; in fact, many growers are putting in tile bottoms in preference to those of wood. A bench much in favor is one with wooden legs, with heavy pecky cypress stringers running lengthwise. On these stringers is placed the tile, which reaches halfway across the bench. The edgeboard is then set on top of the tile and held fast by either wood or metal strips attached to the legs. A good method is to run a narrow strip of tar paper on top of the stringers, the paper being just wide enough to shed water from the wood. This will lengthen the life of the stringers materially. You can buy tile slabs, which are the same as a regular conduit tile but grooved in such a way as to enable one to split them. This makes a slab with heavy ribs on one side, which act as a reënforcement. They are made in any size to suit. A. F. J. B.

So far as I can judge from this report, it seems most likely that the asparagus is being grown too cold. This crop is seldom satisfactory when grown in a temperature lower than 60 degrees at night, and better results are secured by holding the night temperature at 65 degrees and by giving the plants an abundance of water both overhead and at the root.

When using a dressing of lime on the soil, it is better to apply it sometime previous to mulching, and to wash the lime in with a good watering before putting on the manure, for lime on the manure is likely to liberate some of the ammonia and thus reduce the fertilizer value. W. H. T

ASTERS GOOD BUT SLOW.

I have a bed of sweet peas that seem to be affected with root-rot. Would it be all right to plant the bed to asters? If so, what varieties shall I use and when shall I put them in? Would the late-branching kind be the best? It is a good, solid bed and the soil is rich.
B. B. C.—Kan.

Asters should do well and should make a good paying crop. Sow seeds now of Queen of the Market, also called Queen of the Earlies. Sow the seeds in flats, later transplant into other flats and plant out from these. The late-branching asters would not pay you so well as Queen of the Market. You might also try a batch of Comet. White and pink are the best colors.

If your peas are badly diseased and must be thrown out at once, there necessarily must be a long season when your house will net you nothing. You could sow ten weeks' stocks now and have a Memorial day crop; or there is candytuft. You could procure plants of double feverfew or snapdragons, which would also net good profits at that time. It is not a good policy to put all the eggs in one basket, so why not sow part of the house with asters and the remainder with some other flower crop that would yield you an earlier return? Why not grow a crop of radishes where the asters are to go? They would be out of the way before your asters were ready and would net you a nice sum.

WHO'S WHO IN THE TRADE—AND WHY

A. J. McNUTT.

THOUGH A. J. McNutt once temporarily abandoned the trade, his "absence made his heart grow fonder" and he renewed his horticultural efforts with a resolute energy that scorned difficulties. Note the decisive steps in his progress: Born in Knox county, Tennessee, July 26, 1875; followed his father's occupation of market gardening until after his marriage, in 1895; worked at the business of candy making for five years; returned to the soil, determined to succeed; built his first greenhouse in 1902, making lettuce his main crop; gradually substituted flowers for vegetables, until, in 1913, he was growing flowers only; in February, 1916, purchased the greenhouse establishment of Chas. W. Crouch, at Knoxville, one of the largest ranges in the south; remodeled the Crouch store in elegant and modern fashion. He has served as secretary treasurer and as president of the Knoxville Florists' Society.

TILE BENCHES.

As we are contemplating a change from wood benches to tile, we would like to know what you think of tile bottoms. Are tile benches satisfactory for growing roses and carnations?
W. R. W.

Tile benches are suitable for growing any crop that will grow on wooden benches; in fact, many growers are putting in tile bottoms in preference to those of wood. A bench much in favor is one with wooden legs, with heavy pecky cypress stringers running lengthwise. On these stringers is placed the tile, which reaches halfway across the bench. The edgeboard is then set on top of the tile and held fast by either wood or metal strips attached to the legs. A good method is to run a narrow strip of tar paper on top of the stringers, the paper being just wide enough to shed water from the wood. This will lengthen the life of the stringers materially. You can buy tile slabs, which are the same as a regular conduit tile but grooved in such a way as to enable one to split them. This makes a slab with heavy ribs on one side, which act as a reënforcement. They are made in any size to suit. A. F. J. B.

TENNESSEE FLORISTS

ANNUAL MEETING AT NASHVILLE.

Officers Elected.

The following officers were elected by the Tennessee State Florists' Society at its annual meeting at Nashville January 30:

President—W. Cleveland Johnson, Memphis.

Vice-president—Leo Geny, Nashville.

Secretary-treasurer—Prof. G. M. Bentley, reëlected.

Business Meeting.

The attendance was the largest in the history of the association; there were florists present from the farthest parts of the state, as well as from a number of other states. The attendance at the morning business meeting was over sixty, with a larger number at the afternoon and evening programs.

Exhibits were staged in the loggia of the hotel and the display was by far the best ever made at a meeting of the association. As nothing was shown for competition, there were no judges' reports.

The forenoon was taken up by an unusually interesting business meeting, the county vice-presidents' reports showing that a great deal of progress was made in the state last year, both in new building and in putting the business end of the trade on a higher plane.

The membership of the society is now about seventy-five and there is a determined effort being made to bring it up to 150 by another year. To make this possible, a committee was appointed to confer with the authorities in order to affiliate the society with the extension work being conducted by the state through the State University.

The secretary of the State Fair Association placed $50 at the disposal of the society to be offered in premiums at the fair this fall.

David Schein gave a paper on advertising for florists. It precipitated a lively discussion of the propriety of advertising special sales, etc. It was the consensus that it is not generally best to advertise cut flowers at cut rates, but that special plant sales may be advisable.

Exhibits.

C. L. Baum, of Knoxville, made an interesting display of gladiolus bulbs, all grown on his place. He is growing several acres of these bulbs and is increasing. He also showed some magnificent orchids and good vases of Matchless, Beacon, Enchantress, Enchantress Supreme, Mrs. C. E. Akehurst, Dr. Sam, Mrs. Ward and Alice carnations.

Keur & Sons, of Hillegom, Holland, had a representative at the show with an exhibit of pictures of bulbs growing in Holland.

Chas. Tritchler, of Nashville, showed a good collection of ferns, two of which appeared good subjects for table use and a decided departure from the conventional table fern. They were Smithii and Minisai, both dwarf ferns of the ostrich plume type.

The Grasselli Chemical Co. made a display of its fungicides and insecticides.

McIntyre Bros. showed large vases of Gorgeous and Mrs. Ward carnations, a fine display of cyclamens and the best vase of Russell roses we have ever seen.

Geny Bros. showed the only azaleas that were staged; also primulas, hyacinths and roses.

The Joy Floral Co. showed Enchantress, Delhi and Belle Washburn carnations. Delhi seems to many to be the best red carnation ever grown in this city. Of the Joy cyclamens the best carried sixty-three blooms. Baby primroses also were good.

J. W. Crouch, of Knoxville, staged a number of vases of peas, the most attractive being Mrs. Skach, Orange Orchid, Rose Queen and Christmas Pink Orchid.

There was a good trade exhibit of Nico-Fume and kindred products of the Kentucky Tobacco Product Co.

Haury & Sons exhibited made up boxes and cyclamens.

Robert Shoch, of the M. Rice Co., Philadelphia, showed a line of baskets and other florists' accessories, St. Valentine's day, St. Patrick's day and Easter novelties.

G. J. Tielman, of Johnson City, Tenn., showed a vase of his seedling carnation, No. 4.

Cohen & Hiller, New York, had a display of ribbons, etc.

Schloss Bros., New York, had an exhibit of ribbons and chiffon.

WHITMANI FERNS ON BENCHES.

Please tell me the best way to grow Whitmani ferns on benches through the summer. Is it best to buy 2-inch plants and bench them through the summer? What kind of soil is best for them?

C. H.—Ore.

Nephrolepis Whitmani may be grown in a bench containing about four inches of ordinary potting soil, to which may be added enough sand or leaf-mold to make the compost more open, if the soil is heavy. Strong 2-inch pot plants will be satisfactory for this purpose if planted in May. Give plenty of ventilation during the summer, but do not water too heavily before the plants are established, or the soil may become sour. Use a thin shading on the glass, during the hot weather, but remove it by the middle of September.

Some growers prefer to keep these ferns in pots throughout the season, claiming that shorter and more compact plants may thus be grown, but when grown in this manner they require repotting twice, while the bench-grown plants need potting only at the time of lifting.

RADIANCE AND RED RADIANCE.

I wish to grow two varieties of roses that will go well with Ophelia. I would want a good pink and a good red. What do you think of Radiance and Red Radiance? Are these varieties easily subject to mildew or the spot diseases? What is the proper temperature for them?

E. A. R.—Ill.

Both Radiance and Red Radiance are free growers and good producers, and where the stock is grown for local demand they should be profitable varieties to mate with Ophelia. When grown for the wholesale market, especially the Chicago market, they have not proven profitable, as the demand for the blooms of these varieties has not been steady enough to pay the growers to produce them in quantity. I believe they sell well in the eastern markets.

Both varieties are practically free from disease and grow best in a temperature of 60 degrees at night, with 4 to 6 degrees higher on cloudy days and 10 degrees higher on sunny days.

SOUTHERN PROGRESS.

The florists' business in all the south has been making rapid progress of late, but in no section better progress than in the southwest. The number of new people entering the business has been considerable, but the greater part of the increased demand has been absorbed, thus far, by the old, established florists, who have been adding to and improving their facilities at a remarkable rate.

Illustrations in this issue show the downtown store of the Lang Floral & Nursery Co., of Dallas, Tex., and the greenhouse establishment on Ross avenue, the two constituting an equipment modern in every respect.

The first greenhouses are among the oldest in the south, Otto Lang, the president of the company, having been among the pioneers in his section, but, as the picture indicates, the office building is new, as are the greenhouses in its rear, the latter being of the wide modern type. The greenhouses and sales office, originally located in the outskirts of the city, now are in the thickly built up "heart" of the city, but the policy of making it easy for the people of Dallas to buy flowers long ago called for opening a downtown store. Recently a new and better location was secured and a few weeks before Christmas the present establishment was opened, on one of the best corners in the city. One of the illustrations shows the front, with its two modern display windows, while the other gives an idea of the interior arrangement, the latter photograph having been made without decoration so as to better show the fixtures.

KANSAS CITY.

The Market.

Business has been good in all lines. There are large receipts of cut flowers, but the demand is ahead of the supply and all kinds of seasonable stock are cleared out every evening. The prices on some stock are a little above normal. The stiffest market is on Beauties, which still are on the short side. Some fine Russells are seen, but the good ones are as scarce as Beauties. Roses in general are short of the usual supply and prices are high. The supply of carnations is about the same as that of last week, the blooms not being any too plentiful. There is a sufficient supply of lilies for present needs. Sweet peas are the most plentiful flowers at present, but the prices of these are high. The sweet peas this year have better and longer stems than those of the winter crop last year. Bulbous stock of all kinds is more plentiful and the quality is good. Stevia is rapidly disappearing.

Various Notes.

The Western Association of Nurserymen held its twenty-seventh annual meeting at the Coates House in this city January 24 and 25.

L. C. Fields, of Kansas City, Kan., has been in business in that city for twelve years. He has 4,500 feet of glass devoted to pot plants. His son, R. H. Fields, is associated with him. What with the work in the greenhouse and the cut flower trade, both are busy. They have large quantities of funeral work and their pot plant sales are good, especially of cyclamens, begonias and lilies.

Mr. and Mrs. John Stevens were going home in their automobile on the evening of January 25 when they met with an accident. Both were injured, but not severely. The car was smashed beyond repair. This somewhat crippled Mr. Stevens' delivery service, as he has been delivering orders in his touring car.

A. Newell had one of the largest decorations of the season at the Hotel Muehlbach last week.

C. W. Lemon, who formerly was associated with the Olathe establishment, and L. F. Clive, of Topeka, have bought the St. Mary's greenhouses. These two men have had a wide experience in landscape, greenhouse and store work.

R. S. Brown & Son are busily occupied with their shipping business and are preparing spring stock. This firm has a great many orders already booked and inquiries are heavy. Mr. Bridgeland says that from the looks of things it is going to be hard to get enough stock to meet the demand.

The J. G. Peppard Seed Co. has installed machinery for mixing lawn grass seed. This concern reports that business has started to open up.

The Harnden Seed Co. states that imported seeds are alarmingly scarce. This company says that business is good and that business this spring will be heavy on account of the high cost of living, which makes for more vegetable gardens.

T. Lee Adams says that seeds are higher in price, but that this does not seem to affect the sales, as there is too large a demand. The shipping business has started and a large number of orders are booked.

W. J. B.

Elmira, N. Y.—Another section is to be added to the large range of the United States Cut Flower Co. The new addition is to be erected at a cost of about $25,000 and will be 300 feet long. It is to be devoted exclusively to Mock and Ophelia roses.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

The market continues remarkably firm, when the dullness in the retail department of the cut flower business is considered. Funeral work last week seems to have been the only foundation for stability. It therefore is fortunate that the rose shipments continue light, for this doubtless has been what has held the market steady. There was not a usable rose of the shorter lengths left January 27. Extra American Beauties were quoted at 60 cents to 75 cents as the week closed. Hadley is back to 60 cents for the selects. Ophelia, Sunburst and all the twenty other varieties were held at the same good values as a week ago. Rose advisers in the wholesale ranks say we may expect a break early in February, when the houses that have been off crop begin to do duty once more. The quality of most of the roses arriving is above reproach.

Carnations were firm at the close of the week. Good flowers of any color brought $4 per hundred; none sold under $3 and a few of the specialties sold at $5 per hundred. Cattleyas and other orchids continue equal to the demand. The quality of the cattleyas is greatly improved. Longiflorums are strong at $10 to $12 per hundred; a few long-stemmed flowers were held at 15 cents each. Valley has not changed its quotation for weeks; "2 to 5 and take your choice." The demand seems light. Gardenias are improving in stem and quality; the best now bring $3 per dozen. There is an abundance of the low grades, some selling as low as 50 cents per dozen.

The market is surfeited with short-stemmed tulips, for which there is little demand. The rest of the bulbous stock is selling freely and at excellent prices. Callas have sold as high as $20 per hundred. Freesia is especially fine at present.

Sweet peas are abundant and some of the stock is superb, bringing as high as $3 per hundred sprays. Violets are plentiful. The street men are again in evidence on the mild days. Pansies, daisies, wallflowers, primulas, mignonette and all the rest of the seasonable flowers, flowering shrubs and blooming plants, especially azaleas and cyclamens, are plentiful.

Various Notes.

February 12 is carnation night at the Florists' Club. The spring flower show is the subject for discussion. Phil Kessler again is chairman of the house committee and has some Virginia hams up his sleeve.

Gus Schmidt, of Riedel & Meyer's force, is in the hospital, ill with pneumonia.

The George W. Crawbuck Co. has leased its branch store at 57 West Twenty-eighth street to Thomas Young, Jr. Mr. Young will have his wholesale cut flower enterprise at this address.

Another wholesaler on West Twenty-eighth street, between Sixth and Seventh avenues, will locate this week over the store of the George W. Crawbuck Co.

Arthur Saltford, of Poughkeepsie, was in the city last week and was quite a purchasing factor in the wholesale market.

A. L. Young finished his jury duties January 27, with the famous Osborn-Tanzer case.

McKinley day was dark and rainy. There seems to be little public recognition of the anniversary.

Myers & Samtman, of Chestnut Hill, Pa., are sending M. C. Ford a new rose, a sport from Old Gold, that promises a supply of new gold to its growers and distributors.

Chas. Lenker, of Freeport, has been honorably discharged by the grand jury from the charge made against him some weeks ago.

D. C. Arnold has returned from a six months' pleasure trip in the west.

Louis Dupuy and family, of Whitestone, have returned from Bermuda.

Joseph Fenrich and wife are spending week ends at Asbury Park.

Bowling.

The bowling club has many visitors at its afternoon sessions and a strong team for the S. A. F. convention is assured. The following scores were made on January 25:

Player	1st	2d	3d
John Miesem	193	168	151

C. W. Scott	165	147	142

M. Kakuda	161	165	140
W. P. Ford	160	150	147

J. Austin Shaw.

It is rumored that the New York Florists' Club will give another din-dan or dinner dance at the Biltmore, Saturday night, March 17, the first Saturday of the flower show. In addition to a dinner of rare goodness, with the happysome accompaniment of dancing, there will be a mystery. Chairman A. L. Miller says it's going to be "a big joy bubble, which will be burst in the center of the room at exactly 12 o'clock." The committee urges an early reservation of tables. Tickets, for lady or gentleman, will be $5 each. T. B. De Forest is secretary, 30 East Forty-second street.

Sydney B. Wertheimer, of Wertheimer Bros., states that the cry of the hour from florists is for novelties in ribbons. Mr. Wertheimer says that, while the consumption of plain ribbons is increasing, the constant demand is for variations of weaves and colorings. Mr. Wertheimer cites this as an example that the florists of the United States are distinctly wide-awake and that the dry goods and millinery man no longer dictates the distinctive styles for florists. Salesmen in this house are instructed, whenever a new idea is presented to them by any of their customers, to immediately transmit it to the house, where it is worked out by experts in floral textiles at the Werbro Mills in Paterson, N. J. That is why most ribbons now used by florists have a distinctly different appearance from those displayed in the department stores.

THE RAISE IN PRICES

IT IS EASY FOR FLORISTS.

To Avoid a Loss.

"Although everything used in the business has advanced in price during 1916 and the cost of running a greenhouse this season is at least seventy-five per cent, and possibly 100 per cent, greater than the cost in previous seasons, I have not raised my prices one penny and hope to get through without a loss by making such economies as are possible."

The speaker was a grower whose specialty is pot plants and whose stock always has enjoyed an excellent reputation. He is located in the east. But from the west, in the same day's mail, came a letter from a grower whose specialty is cut flowers, partly retailed in his own store, but mostly sold at wholesale to florists in nearby towns. This is what he said:

To Make a Profit.

"You may be interested to know that we have this season advanced our prices materially and that it apparently has had no effect on the business except to save the loss of profits threatened by the greatly increased cost of doing business. Of course we did not advance our prices all at once, but made small advances steadily; scarcely any of our customers made any comment and those who asked usually were satisfied that the small advance then made was fully justified by conditions."

The fact of the matter is that increases in the prices of commodities have become so general that they no longer attract attention. It is taken for granted that things cost more this season than they did last season and the fact that the prices of any given article are higher than they were before the war passes without notice.

No Resistance Now.

In the earlier stages of the advance there was resistance, but the resistance has been worn down by the fact that at practically every attempt to purchase the buyer has found that it was necessary to pay more money than before. It applies to everything except a few trade-marked commodities, and on these original margins of profit were unusually good.

That the florist who does not attempt to raise his prices is deliberately sacrificing his profits is shown by the statement of the eastern plantsman as compared with the statement of the western cut flower grower. If a man growing cut flowers can raise his prices without encountering resistance on the part of his wholesale and retail customers, surely the plantsman can make moderate advances without difficulty.

An Increase Must Be Asked.

As a matter of fact nearly all florists selling to the public are asking better prices this season than heretofore. It is easy to get them; all one has to do is to keep his rates within reason.

Practically the only reason why retail prices in this trade have not been advanced in any locality is because the florists there have been afraid to ask an advance. People cannot be expected to pay more than they are asked; if the florist still sells carnations for 35 cents a dozen and never asks any more, the price of carnations among his customers never will be 50 cents per dozen; but if he sets up a fair grade of goods and asks 50 cents per dozen he will get it as easily as he formerly got 35 cents. Only in a few cases will an explanation be demanded. The florist who formerly got 75 cents per dozen for his carnations can get $1 as easily under present conditions. A cyclamen plant that sold for $1 last season will as easily fetch $1.25 this season, if the price is asked, not otherwise.

A RETAILERS' RIALTO

MADISON AVENUE, NEW YORK.

Business Home of Many Florists.

Madison avenue may fairly claim to be the retail phenomenal street of the florists' business of New York. Commencing at Forty-fourth street, we find the headquarters of Charles Dards, one of the big business centers of the industry, established some forty years. Mr. Dards recently returned from a pleasure trip to Hawaii, California and Japan.

Opposite the Dards store is Ramm's Flower Shop, one of the latest acquisitions of the street and a "success from the opening," I understand.

The next store is Ralph Armstrong's, at the Forty-seventh street corner. It is a handsome place, with a wealth of windows. Mr. Armstrong formerly was with Wadley & Smythe. He has a branch at Newport during the summer and it is growing steadily.

Across the way, at Forty-eighth street, A. T. Bunyard has built up a remarkable business in the last seven years. He spent several years with the Rosery and Siebrecht's before launching out on the independent sea. Mr. Bunyard also has a summer branch at Newport, R. I.

At Forty-ninth street, No. 426, A. Kottmiller has established a splendid business. He has a branch in the Vanderbilt hotel and a growing reputation for artistic and original decorative effects. A silver cup in the window speaks of first honors in this line.

Next on the avenue, No. 503, is J. H. Small & Sons' "handsomest flower store in the world." How the S. A. F. visitors will enjoy this store!

At No. 509 is H. H. Burns' neat headquarters, where this chip of the old block is "making good." His brother grows fine Hadleys for the wholesale market and everybody knows his father.

Joseph Leikens comes next, at Fifty-fifth street. He also has a branch at Newport. Joe is the soldier florist and did his bit in Mexico last year with his regiment, losing some thirty or forty pounds while at it, but Joseph is himself again.

At the Fifty-sixth street corner is John W. Hauser's store, which has been in the landscape there more than thirty years.

Two blocks north Myer Gottlieb has a big store. He owns the entire building. He spent his earlier years with A. McConnell, has a branch in the Plaza and stays in the business for the love of it.

Close to the corner of Fifty-ninth street is Warendorff's branch of the Ansonia, and one of the neatest of Warendorff's "all-over-town" enterprises.

At No. 692 Madison avenue, near Sixty-first street, the rejuvenated Haufft Bros. are to be found. The originals of fifty years ago have crossed the great divide; their sons now are living in Newark and California. The younger members of the family are now in the new store, which is more roomy and more modern than the old one.

Christatos & Koster come next, at No. 717, near Sixty-third street. They have a good store, a good reputation and have been established at this location about a dozen years.

Between Sixty-third and Sixty-fourth streets a new firm has located, by name Daniels & Markellos, which makes a specialty of Japanese everlasting flowers. The members say their Christmas business was satisfactory.

William Kather, for years one of Wadley & Smythe's best decorators, has a neat store at 754 Madison avenue, with a palm department on the second floor. He has been in business over a year and is well pleased with what he has accomplished.

Just above him, at No. 810, are Rigo Bros., who had a long experience with Joseph Fenrich and other wholesalers.

At No. 922, at the intersection of Seventy-third street, is the new store of Siebrecht Bros., with William Siebrecht at the helm. The locality is desirable and the store roomy and attractive. The name of Siebrecht has been a household word—floriculturally—in New York for nearly half a century. Henry Siebrecht, Sr., is still as young and active at 69 as ever, and devotes his energies to his big range and nursery at New Rochelle.

Then, at No. 924, is the store of Andrew Eckrich, successor to Charles Grunewald, recently deceased. Mr. Eckrich has been in the florists' business for thirty years, the last twenty years with Mr. Grunewald, who bequeathed his business to his employee. Mr. Eckrich is still a young man and is well liked in the trade.

Next comes Henry Hession's enlarged, redecorated and handsome store. There are ample greenhouse attachments and the establishment is one of the finest in upper New York—and Madison avenue is only one block distant, it must be remembered, from Fifth avenue.

Just above Hession's, at No. 1000, is the fine new store of Lena Hart. It is complete in every requirement and is considered one of the best locations on this famous avenue of flower stores.

Then last, but not least, at No. 1064, the pedestrian is greeted by the smart store front of Adolph Meyer.

So, between Nos. 340 and 1064, or between Forty-fourth and Seventy-sixth streets, on Madison avenue, a distance of less than two and one-half miles, there are twenty-one flower stores; and every one of them is a credit to the New York retail industry and to the gentlemen at the head of the enterprises.

LILY OF THE VALLEY

STARTING VALLEY PIPS.

Which valley pips are best for forcing, the German, Danish or Dutch? How far apart shall I plant them in the sand? Will three or four inches of sand in the bench be enough? Is it best to leave the tip of the bulb a little above the sand? A. L.—Mo.

The German variety, Berlin, is the best for forcing. Use six inches of sand to plant the valley in; four inches is hardly enough. Set the pips one to one and one-half inches apart in the rows and let the rows run three inches apart. You can give an inch more if you have ample room. Allow the tips of the pips to stand above the sand in all cases. C. W.

OUTDOOR LILY OF THE VALLEY.

Will you please tell me whether valley pips, such as are used in a greenhouse, will grow outside to make a permanent bed? C. H. K.—Mich.

Valley pips, such as are used for forcing, will grow outside finely. Be sure to trench the ground well where they are to be planted, manuring liberally, as once a bed is planted it will last for a number of years. If you can secure pips of Forton's valley, I would suggest getting it, as it is superior to all others outdoors. The spikes are strong and the bells are extra large.

C. W.

FORCING THE PIPS.

Kindly give me information on the forcing of lily of the valley. Please state the necessary temperature of the sand and also the temperature of the house. R. & S.—Ia.

In the forcing of lily of the valley the temperature of the house is of small consequence; all that is needed is that there be means of supplying heat in severe weather. It is bottom heat that is of prime importance. The degree will depend largely on the season of the year, the earliest forced pips requiring 80 degrees to 85 degrees, but gradually lessening toward the natural flowering time, in April or May, to 65 to 70 degrees. The piping beneath the bench should be ample to maintain the higher temperature, boarded up so as to confine the heat beneath the bench, but with part of the boards hinged so that some of the heat can be liberated in the house upon occasion.

Probably you understand the construction of the bench, with facilities for keeping the valley in the dark until it comes time to color it up and harden it off. F. R.

LOUISVILLE, KY.

The Market.

Although we have had severe weather during the last few weeks, January has not by any means been a dull month, as it usually is. The heavy funeral work has made business better than it usually is at this time. Carnations are just beginning to show up on the profit side of the ledger, having been in extremely short crop until the last few weeks. Although the cut at present is extra heavy with most of the growers, the demand is far in excess of the supply, and large quantities of shipped-in flowers are being used, which seems contrary to the statement that the carnation is waning in popularity. From reports of several growers, even more glass will be devoted to carnations next year.

The demand for spring flowers has come to life during the last two weeks, large quantities of freesias being snapped up as soon as they are offered. The same is true of sweet peas. Yarrawa, that wonderful Australian variety, has been grown especially well by some of the growers. Calendulas, antirrhinums, stocks, mignonette and marguerites arrive in moderate quantities.

The roses offered in the stores are, with few exceptions, from other centers, chiefly Chicago. Local greenhouses, having furnished a good crop, are now at low ebb, and every attention is being given the plants in order to supply the ever-increasing demand at Easter.

Various Notes.

At the W. L. Korb greenhouses Mr. Korb has two carnations of his own production. These varieties have gained considerable recognition locally. One is described by a color expert as a Japanese red. Besides being a novelty in color, it is of large size and is said to be a better keeper than any one of the present varieties. The other origination is a medium pink. Mr. Korb intends to disseminate both varieties as soon as adequate stock is produced, there being only about 200 plants of each at present.

The Victor Mathis greenhouses are beginning to lose their barren appearance, which was caused by the heavy holiday trade. The plants for Valentine's day and Easter now are getting close attention, to bring them to their highest development at the right time.

Anders Rasmussen, the New Albany grower, is making shipments of approximately 10,000 carnations per week to the Philadelphia market, besides supplying the needs of the Louisville flower merchants. His roses at present are off crop.

Webb Frantz, who has been associated with the Nanz & Neuner Co. for several years, has accepted a position with F. Walker & Co. at the Preston road establishment. Mr. Frantz, while with the Nanz & Neuner Co., was manager of the greenhouses at St. Matthews.

John Doll, who for the last nine years has been head gardener on Judge Humphrey's estate at Glenview, Ky., now is with F. Walker & Co. This concern can congratulate itself on securing two men of such proven ability.

An old landmark belonging to H. G. Walker, president of F. Walker & Co., was destroyed by fire last week. Snow on the nearby buildings prevented the flames from spreading to the greenhouses. The family of Kingsley Walker occupied the old dwelling.

H. E. Humiston, of the Chicago Feed & Fertilizer Co., was in town recently. He expressed regret at being able to visit only a few of the growing establishments. The weather at the time was bad, there being a foot of snow and the temperature at zero.

Local importers have received hard knocks this season. Consignments of Christmas stock have just been received. Several cases of English hollies, Skimmia Japonica and bay trees, which came a short time ago, were in excellent condition; in fact, it was some of the best stock ever received from Europe, but it will be absolutely useless for the purpose intended. Two cases of box evergreens for use last fall came in heated, the entire lot a dead loss. Several cases of dormant roses were received in fairly good shape. Here is but another argument in favor of the made-in-America idea. Bring on those wonderful productions we see and hear so much about out at Eureka, Cal.!

OPEN LETTERS from READERS

DOWN WITH STREET PEDDLERS!

In The Review for January 11 there appeared an article in which a commission dealer's views of the faker problem were quoted. Now, I disagree with the author on several of his opinions. I maintain that the street peddler does more harm than good. The peddler's stock, being cheap, cannot be fresh, and will last such a short time that the buyer is made to consider flowers a foolish, short-lived luxury. The same money expended for a few fresh flowers would have the opposite result; such sales would tend to make permanent customers. No matter what the price, stale flowers universally hurt the business in two ways: First, the growers who retail their own stock are forced to sacrifice it because of the competition; second, numerous flower buyers are lost.

A more uniform price on flowers is advocated; that is, if flowers are high during the holiday season they should not sell at one-fourth as much the following week. When this is the case the people think they have been held up. Would it not be a better plan to have the prices more normal during the second week and to give fifteen or sixteen flowers instead of a dozen, thus making the customers feel that they are receiving extra good measure? Or, in another way, why not keep the prices normal the whole time, and thereby not lose after the holidays what was made during the holidays? As for explaining to customers about weather conditions, etc., as suggested in this article, one has neither the time nor patience to tell every customer who telephones or calls. Moreover, few customers would understand how in one week carnation prices can drop from $1.50 to 35 cents, whereas they could understand the change of prices of strawberries from March to June—time enough to grow and ripen a crop.

The average commission dealer does not give the storemen a chance at the bargains. He feels that the storemen are the ones he must make his money on, and he uses the venders simply to work off his surpluses. He would rather sell all the surplus at a big sacrifice than sell part of the surplus for practically the same price. The latter way surely is much fairer to both growers and storemen. If at any time a sacrifice in prices is to be made, the commissionman should notify the storemen—the ones who really keep him in business—and not unload the stock on department stores, 5 and 10-cent stores and street venders.

Quoting from this article: "Mr. Commissionman receives his flowers in the morning and holds them all for what he thinks a fair price, no matter what class the buyer belongs to. Perhaps he does not clean up that day and is compelled to carry some flowers over until the next day. If so, and the flowers are in good condition, he tries to get the regular price, but if they finally have to be sold at cheap prices to save dumping them, it at least gives the grower something." The flowers usually have been cut the day before the commissionman receives them. They, therefore, are three days old by the time the storeman can buy and give them away as advertisements. By that time they would be too stale for good advertising, and would lead the recipients to believe that the advertiser's flowers did not last long. Because the commissionmen want to make a few cents more for one or two growers, many others are harmed and the business is hurt in general.

Would it not be better for the commissionman to notify the storemen on the first day the surplus stock is on hand and give them the benefit of the oversupply? In this way the business would still remain in the hands of the florists, and the local growers as well as the growers of the shipped-in stock would have fair play, since cheap sales hurt both of them.

OBITUARY

F. J. Lake.

F. J. Lake, of Wellesley Hills, Mass., one of the oldest florists in the vicinity of Boston, died January 27. He was in his eighty-fourth year. Mr. Lake was one of the pioneer stallholders at the old Park Street flower market. His specialties were carnations, asparagus and asters. His son, A. G. Lake, has for some years been managing the business. Mr. Lake for a number of years was one of the board of assessors of Wellesley Hills, where he resided for twenty-eight years. W. N. C.

Henry Seger.

Henry Seger, 1517 West One-hundred-twelfth place, Washington Heights, Chicago, died January 26, at the age of 51 years. Mr. Seger came to this country from Germany seventeen years ago. Shortly after his arrival he accepted a position at the South Park conservatory, Chicago. About fifteen years ago he went into business for himself and had ever since been engaged in the retail flower trade. Previous to his death he had been ailing for many years. His wife and two sons survive him.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

The Market.

Business last week was good, orders for funerals, weddings and other social functions being numerous. A scarcity of flowers has kept prices a trifle above normal, and with the high price of coal and the temperatures below the freezing point most of the time, it is doubtful if there is a chance for any reduction at present.

Prices on roses are steep and there is a decided shortage of good stock. Carnations are good but few. The appearance of daffodils and tulips, with increasing quantities of sweet peas, is affording some relief.

Various Notes.

The Butcher greenhouses have made a specialty of Ophelia roses.

W. P. Carpenter, the Union Station florist, last week was confined to his home by a severe cold.

F. Jordan is eliminating flowers from his greenhouses and will devote the space to tomatoes.

Bert West, manager for William Hay, was on the sick list last week.

Joseph Solomon, who conducts the flower department at S. S. Kresge's, has taken over the store of the Empire Floral Co.

Marcus Morton Burdick, vice-president of the Rhode Island Horticultural Society, died at his home in this city last week. He was in his seventy-fourth year. He previously was president of the society for two years.

Harry Oakley, formerly in business as the Empire Floral Co., has taken a position with William Bowers, on Washington street.

E. Brooke, of T. J. Johnston & Co., reports a good business since the company removed to the location at 107 Washington street.

James B. Canning, of Smith street, is back in the harness after a long period of illness.

Joseph E. Koppelman is cutting good gardenias from his houses at Riverside. He is shipping them to Boston and New York, as the local market has comparatively little use for these flowers.

Howard Macrae, son of Alex. Macrae, of F. Macrae & Sons, has returned to his studies at Cornell University, after a year's practical experience at the A. N. Pierson establishment at Cromwell, Conn. W. H. M.

MISSOURI FLORISTS.

The appointments of the vice-presidents of the Missouri State Florists' Association were made last week, and comprise the following: H. Archias, Sedalia, Mo., two years; Frank A. Windler, St. Louis, Mo., two years; William L. Rock, Kansas City, Mo., one year; Earl Reed, Louisiana, Mo., one year. These comprise a representative of the wholesalers, retailers, growers, and the nurserymen of Missouri and President Knapp is to be congratulated on the selection of such able and progressive material to constitute part of the executive board of the Missouri State Florists' Association.

W. S. Wells, Sec'y.

AMERICAN ROSE SOCIETY.

The executive committee of the American Rose Society held a well attended meeting in the Bellevue-Stratford hotel at Philadelphia January 25. It was decided to make the whole show resemble a great rose garden; that is, that the rose garden to be put up by the American Rose Society should not only be the central feature of the exhibition, but that the decoration should harmonize with it and also the other exhibits insofar as that is possible. Henry A. Dreer, Inc., courteously altered its rose garden plan, so as to help to carry out this idea. Walter Vanden Hengle, of J. J. Habermehl's Sons, has drawn a plan for the rose garden that he has colored, showing the details, and the plan for the hall decoration. This will probably be passed upon at the meeting February 1. Secretary Benj. Hammond reported that practically all of the fifty per cent of the guarantee fund called in for February 1 is now in the treasury. John B. Geraghty, right-hand man to W. F. Therkildson, submitted photographs to be used in the Sunday and daily papers in the publicity campaign which is to be opened next week. Phil.

LADIES' S. A. F.

Secretary Mrs. Charles H. Maynard announces a change in her address to Point Chautauqua, N. Y., and requests that communications be addressed to her there, instead of Pittsburgh, Pa., as formerly.

AMHERST, MASS.

The annual Boston trip of the classes in floriculture at the Massachusetts Agricultural College will take place February 15 to 17.

Prof. A. H. Nehrling recently returned from a trip to Indianapolis.

Prof. F. A. Waugh lectured on "Gardens," at Ames, Ia., January 31.

E. J. Canning spoke on "The Nursery Business and Its Relation to Floriculture" at a recent meeting of the M. A. C. Florists' and Gardeners' Club. Aubrey Butler will address the club this week on "Retail Store Management."

WESTERLY, R. I.

Conrad Schulz has returned from a business trip to New York city and vicinity.

George L. Stillman is sending out an unusually large edition of his dahlia catalogue.

Welcome Carmichael, who has been employed elsewhere, hereafter will devote his entire time to the affairs of the Carmichael Orchards at Shannock, where peonies and gladioli are the specialties. W. H. M.

MOTT-LY MUSINGS

A. H. Woeppel, of Corning, N. Y., was putting the finishing touches on some handsome funeral pieces and remarked how pleasant the task was when one had suitable stock for the purpose. Some choice carnations were noted, especially the Enchantress family and White Wonder. Formosa is the favorite lily for Easter. "We had Formosa lily plants last season that carried fourteen to fifteen blooms from bulbs 9x11, and we look for as good returns this Easter, judging from present appearances," observed Mr. Woeppel. "You," added Mr. Woeppel, "will be sorry to know that my brother, Jerome, who has been my assistant since we began business, has been obliged to give up owing to an incurable disease."

W. A. Wettlin, of Hornell, N. Y., remarked that through continuous advertising he has built up a wholesale plant business that takes more stock than he can grow. He seriously thinks of building greenhouses on the farm he purchased two years ago, and mentioned in passing that the fruit and vegetables grown on the farm during the last summer and sold at the store in town paid the running expenses.

E. V. B. Felthousen, of Schenectady, one of the largest growers of bedding plants in the Mohawk valley, says there will be a scarcity of bedding stock on account of the lateness and mildness of the fall season. Heat was withheld and plants are backward in consequence. Undoubtedly the grower of this class of stock will find a ready market for his plants.

L. J. Rowe, of Titusville, Pa., was hustling in a shipment of coal and said: "This is a friend in need at this time, when natural gas is undependable."

W. M. Deyoe & Co., of Oil City, Pa., report excellent business, including much funeral work. A decoration for a concert, consisting of Golden Spur and Paper White narcissi, of their own growing, was most artistic.

C. E. Gunton, of the Red Rock Rosery, Bradford, Pa., was bothered with an insect that bored into the buds of roses, especially Beauties, and caused much damage. He has found a remedy for the intruder. W. M.

The Review brings results.

IN spite of the higher costs of all materials, it looks as though this will prove to be a record year for greenhouse building.

FULSOME praise of certain novelties, in quarters known not to weigh their words, is thought to have been a handicap to their sale this season.

PERSONALITY still counts for much in the flower business. It is difficult to develop flower growing or selling on the impersonal, system plan.

THERE are many growers of carnations who think roses have been a more profitable crop the last year or two, but after they have changed they will wish they hadn't. It is ever thus.

THE final premium list for the St. Louis spring show, March 15 to 18, has been issued. Correspondence concerning competitive exhibits should be addressed to Frank Weber, Nursery, Mo.

THE excellent returns to rose growers this season are being made by a good average. Top prices have not been higher than usual, but the bottom has not been so low as frequently is the case. A demand which makes possible clean sales at moderate prices is the secret of the season's success.

WITHIN the last few weeks The Review has received several letters from employees in greenhouse establishments, the writers explaining that it is with regret they are leaving the trade for more profitable employment in some other line. It seems clear many florists have not felt able to advance wages as they have been advanced in most other trades and it affords another evidence of the necessity of pushing up the retail prices of plants and cut flowers.

THE white paper used to print this issue of The Review weighed 10,645 pounds, or nearly five and one-half tons.

WILL DISCUSS EXPRESS SERVICE.

The shortcomings of the express service at Christmas have stirred up the whole country, but especially the Philadelphians. In The Review for January 25, in the Philadelphia column, there was a request from members addressed to W. F. Therkildson, chairman of the Essay Committee, asking that a leader be assigned for the discussion of the matter at the Florists' Club. Here is Mr. Therkildson's answer.

Noticing in the Philadelphia Notes the open letter addressed to W. F. Therkildson, I am happy to report that I have secured, for March 6, the very man that the two members and even more want to hear. In other words, for March 6 I have secured an official of the Wells Fargo Express Co., name not yet announced, who will talk to the Philadelphia Florists' Club. For February 6, Max Schling will talk on "Art and Nature."

It is understood the members are privileged to heckle the expressman.

WHICH?

One class of people want things cheap. Another class want things dear. A third class want things good. Which class do you cater to?

Persons who want things cheap consider price first, last and all the time. It is what they pay, not what they get, that is kept in mind. Consequently they usually get less value for their money than anyone else. Those who want things dear also consider price first, but they pay enough so the seller usually can afford to give the best. But neither class of customers is permanent; the "cheap" buyers flock to the new place that offers low grade goods a little cheaper, while the "dear" purchasers stampede to the latest place that finds fashion's fleeting favor.

The florist who builds a permanent patronage is the one who sees to it that everything he sells is good—not flashy; just plain good. He can not compete in price with the fellow whose only idea is to undersell, but he will have no trouble in getting prices that will satisfy both buyer and seller; he will make the business pay, pay consistently, and paying consistently means steadily and well.

MONEY IN FLORISTS' POCKETS.

Everybody is familiar with the old quotation about the man who made two blades of grass grow where only one blade grew before, and it may not be wholly new to apply it to the purposes of a trade paper, but the fact is St. Valentine's day affords an especially fine illustration of how The Review has put thousands upon thousands of dollars into the pockets of the trade.

Not that The Review ever has caused money to rain on florists like manna from heaven—that was a miracle, and the days of miracles are over—but that the paper can and has, repeatedly, shown to enterprising florists opportunities and methods whereby the trade may increase its sales and its profits.

The beauty of it is The Review's suggestions work out in practice—they have the punch—they get there.

To cite a conspicuous example that all will remember, there's Mothers' day. The Review did not originate Mothers' day, but scarcely any florists had heard of it before The Review, recognizing an opportunity for the trade as a whole to add many thousands of dollars to the annual sales, made Mothers' day the feature of one of its issues. Every florist knows what happened: That year hundreds of florists pushed Mothers' day, and The Review reported how they did it, and how the public responded. The next year thousands helped, and now everybody pushes Mothers' day. The result is another special flower day has been developed—one that puts, in the aggregate, an immense sum of extra money into circulation in the trade. It might have come to pass, in time, without The Review to point out the opportunity and the methods of developing it—but take the case of St. Valentine's day:

St. Valentine's day has been known to us all since childhood. But what did it amount to for florists until The Review published a special number to tell the trade about the neglected opportunity? Then it was said:

The purpose of this issue is to get 10,000 florists each to do at least a little something to attract the attention of the public to the appropriateness of flowers for use as valentines.

If 10,000 florists did not push flowers for that St. Valentine's day, in 1913, at least they are doing so now—and making money by it.

WHAT THE S. A. F. IS DOING.

In a circular by Secretary Young, sent to the newly appointed state vice-presidents of the S. A. F., there are these paragraphs:

The society has much work mapped out for the near future, including an effort to induce a greater use of flowers on the part of the public. It has been painfully evident within the last two years that the consumption of flowers is woefully short of the production, entailing a vast loss to growers. A campaign of publicity such as the society has in contemplation will entail prodigious expense and can only be entered upon when those whom it will most interest will give the small support asked of them—a membership in the society.

State legislation in regard to the operation of greenhouse heating plants is another important problem now receiving the attention of our organization, one in which individual action is without avail. The growers in every state are threatened with legislation to compel them to yield to unjust measures to force them to employ licensed engineers to run their heating plants, and these to work in eight-hour shifts. Just stop to think what this would cost florists! Could an individual florist do anything to stop it, or change it to meet conditions?

A bureau of credits and collections, to be operated under the auspices of the society, also is planned. A committee headed by C. E. Critchell, of Cincinnati, has the matter under consideration.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

The main feature which characterized the wholesale cut flower market last week was a supply insufficient to meet the brisk demand which came in during the entire week. The market generally was better than the preceding week and good prices, the best average, in fact, since Christmas, prevailed. Although business may be said to have been good during the entire week, there was actually no more stock sold than has been the case right along, but the fact that the better demand enabled wholesalers to clean out well from day to day at good prices, gave an improved tone to the market. A general advance in prices on all stock is being made and the lower figures on inferior grades are being clipped off.

American Beauties are still extremely scarce and are obtaining premium prices. Other varieties of roses are in fair supply, but are clearing readily at good prices. Carnations are in sufficient supply, but are selling well at an advanced figure.

Valley is easier than it has been for some time, due to the increased supply of freesia which is arriving. The latter item is of excellent quality and is selling readily, good quantities being used for corsage work. The supply of Easter lilies is large enough to meet the demand and stock is selling at slightly advanced prices. Orchids are in good demand and are clearing well. The supply of violets is larger than it has been, but the stock is selling well. Sweet peas also arrive in larger quantity. The quality is excellent and better prices are being obtained. Paper Whites arrive in good supply, the quality is good and they are moving well. Small quantities of calendula and mignonette arrive, but they form only an insignificant item.

Tulips and jonquils are in large supply, but are selling well. The supply of daisies is a little larger than it has been. Snapdragons are still slow in arriving and what little stock comes in is readily disposed of.

The New Amling Store.

The E. C. Amling Co., previously located in the Le Moyne building, completed removal to its new home across the street, at 169 to 175 North Wabash avenue, in time to write two sales tickets there January 27. The store since then has been inspected by practically every florist who comes to the market and the opinion is unanimous that the move is the best ever made by the Amling Co. The room is 60x125, located on an alley dignified by the name of Burton place, so that there is an excellent rear entrance adjacent to safe parking space for automobiles. In addition to the street floor, the lease includes the basement and there is a gallery covering the rear half of the main floor. Back of the store proper is a large cold room, excellent for many kinds of flowers the greater part of the year. In addition to the old, mechanically refrigerated iceboxes, built for the Le Moyne block store, a new box has been built. A novelty is that two boxes are on the north side of the room and two on the south side, so that it really makes a double store. In addition to its large size the store has the great advantage of excellent and well diffused light. With room to grow, and a ten years' lease, the company expects to add materially to its business without departing from its policy of confining its operations to cut flowers and greens.

The Amling Co. has leased a portion of the basement of the building to a new wholesale cut flower house, which will be opened about February 10 by Joseph E. Wiltgen, Evanston, and Michael F. Freres. The new firm will go under the name of Wiltgen & Freres.

Joseph Ziska & Sons are moving into the second floor of the building and will be transacting business there next week.

Various Notes.

It is said the recent decision of the United States Supreme court, affirming the judgment of the Illinois Supreme court in favor of Poehlmann Bros. Co., which some years ago filed a petition with the Illinois Warehouse Commission attacking a rate of 40 cents on coal and manure from Galewood to Morton Grove, will mean not only a lower rate, but eventually a reimbursement to that company of over $35,000.

Charles A. Meinersmann, with an office in the Steger building, bought out a retail shop at 4807 North Kedzie avenue, about six months ago and now announces that he has purchased what was formerly the Lister Floral Shop, at 1008 Belmont avenue. The two stores are known as the Albany Florists. Mr. Meinersmann takes an active part in the work and is acquainted with the retail flower business, although his business is landscaping. N. J. Bins is manager of the Belmont avenue store.

A. Henderson thinks he sees a change in the trade tendencies, in that a large number of buyers have ceased to look for the cheapest source of supply and are earnestly in quest of one that can be depended on for first-class stock, well packed, even if the prices are a little higher. Mr. Henderson believes the trade is beginning to appreciate that "the best is the cheapest in the long run."

A little later than usual, Alois Frey, at Crown Point, has begun cutting and shipping his annual crop of Rainbow freesias. He has 60,000 bulbs to flower, not to mention the seedlings under trial.

In an interesting article in the automobile number of the Tribune, Peter Reinberg, writing as chairman of the board of county commissioners instead of as a florist, sent in a word of good cheer to those who use the highways, describing the road-building plans of the county for 1917.

Most successful business men have an avocation as well as a vocation. C. A. Samuelson's is apple orcharding in Idaho. He knows the subject in all its phases and talks most interestingly on it. The varieties he grows are Stayman's Winesap, Jonathan and Rome

Beauty, favored by him in the order named.

After spending January 31 at the Hill place at Richmond and at New Castle, C. J. Michelsen, Eugene Dramm and W. J. Keimel will take in the carnation show at Indianapolis February 1.

McKinley and O. W. Frese had many things in common, including the same birthday anniversary, January 29. Those who know that Mr. Frese has been thirty-six years in the flower business in Chicago can figure out that he must have made his start when he was only fifteen years old.

Although there were no azaleas for Christmas, the local market now is well supplied with plants that are excellently flowered, but which are selling below their real value. Plantsmen say that February and March will see most of the azaleas disposed of, with a comparatively small quantity remaining for Easter.

After a minor operation in St. Luke's hospital January 25, Mrs. W. J. Smyth is recuperating rapidly.

Peter Pearson is convinced that the prices of Holland bulbs cannot stay on the present level of asking prices for 1917 crops. He says that, to begin with, where a grower forces the bulbs for the wholesale market, the price obtained for the cut flowers does not permit the payment of the advances attempted this season by the Holland travelers. He says that he is told by a number of growers that they will not place any orders this season, dropping the forcing of bulbs next fall unless it proves possible to purchase bulbs in the fall at something like normal prices. Mr. Pearson thinks the general adoption of such a policy will result in a fall in the market.

According to George Asmus, the sales of carnations have become a minor matter in the Schiller stores. While white carnations are used for work, the sales of colored carnations as cut flowers have fallen far behind the sales of roses and other flowers.

Wendland & Keimel Co., Elmhurst, will plant 2,000 of Breitmeyer's Rose-pink Ophelia for next season.

While carnations were for a number of years the standby at R. Scheffler's place at Wheaton, this year only three crops now are sweet peas, mums, asters, benches were planted to them. The gladioli, peonies and novelties, indoor and outdoor, with some bedding stock, the latter principally for local sales.

A. L. Randall and Frank Johnson, of the A. L. Randall Co., are sojourning in Cuba. They expect to be gone about four weeks.

The installation of an ice machine and cold storage room by Kroeschell Bros. Co., for Stielow Bros., Niles Center, has been completed and the apparatus is in use.

Frank and Arthur Pesternick, with the Ernst Wienhoeber Co. and Bassett & Washburn respectively, are mourning the loss of their father, who died January 27.

J. P. Risch, of Weiland & Risch, is greatly pleased with the manner in which the trade is taking to Champ Weiland rose. He says it looks as though all the growers who did not plant it this season want to do so for the next one.

Kennicott Bros. Co. has found it necessary to add three new members to the force.

Mrs. Henry Kruchten, wife of Henry Kruchten, of the John Kruchten Co., was operated on for appendicitis last week. She is already on the speedy road to recovery.

O. Johnson, of the Batavia Greenhouse Co., says that his concern will increase its planting of American Beauties next season and cut down on tea roses. This is just the opposite of what most growers are doing.

Light colored asparagus, according to Miss O. A. Tonner, of O. A. & L. A. Tonner, is preferred by many customers to the darker colored stock. The light color is obtained by special cultural methods, she says.

Two more members of the trade were married last week. Peter Bauman, of Peter Reinberg's, was united with Miss Clara Meade, and Wm. Johnson, of A. L. Vaughan's, was married to Miss Stella Glinka. Both marriages took place January 27.

Charles Erne, of Erne & Klingel, is highly pleased over their shipping business, which he says has shown a material increase over last year.

Lewis Hoeckner will do the decorating work of the Gold Room of the Congress hotel for the ball to be given by the Showmen's League of America, of which he is a member.

WHITE WORMS IN SOIL.

There are small white worms in the soil around my plants. The worms are about a quarter of an inch long, have legs like wireworms and two small horns, or feelers, on the head. I noticed them last spring when I dug the beds to plant chrysanthemums. When I took the old mum plants out this fall I noticed that the roots had been eaten. I planted daisies and sweet peas in these beds and I am having the same trouble with them. The sweet peas are about one and one-half inches above the ground, with roots about the same. These little worms eat the main root of the sweet peas, up to the seed. I gave the beds a good dose of lime, but this has had no effect on the worms. The soil is washings taken from the roads and has been in the houses for five years. I cannot get new soil and this is my reason for writing to you. Do you think Slug Shot would be effective if watered into the soil?

O. E.—Pa.

Procure some carbon bisulphide. It comes in pound cans at any drug store and is inexpensive. Bore holes with a pointed stick four inches deep and twelve to fifteen inches apart each way over your beds. In each hole pour half a teaspoonful of the carbon and close up the hole at once. Go over your beds in this way and you should clean out the worms without harming your plants. The carbon gives a gas which suffocates all soil pests. Use no naked

The Market.

The cut flower market is active, with the supply still short of the demand. Roses, carnations, sweet peas, daffodils, lilies and all other varieties of flowers sell well at excellent prices. Violets may be considered an exception to the rule, for violets are not much used just now. Poor flowers find a market at a little below list prices, with buyers who can use whatever they can find, provided the price suits. This explains the really excellent prices, quality considered, that are realized on ordinary stock. Take sweet peas, for example. Far and away the larger portion of peas are of the Spencer type, the so-called orchid peas. The light pinks are, generally speaking, most popular; then come the bright pinks, then the whites. The cerise blooms are not so much in favor; there are few lavenders, so they do not count. Last of all come the old early-flowering, or grandiflora, type of peas. Hardly anyone really wants these now. They take them when the price suits. Of course, there are exceptions. A few grandiflora peas are so well grown that they will sell even against the Spencers, but these are few.

Daffodils are becoming more plentiful and the price is easier. Tulips have been strengthened by the arrival of Couronne d'Or, probably the greatest early double tulip. Valley is getting on a better footing, the buyers seeming to realize that it may be bad business to boycott a friend. White and colored lilacs are fine. Orchids are a little more plentiful; that is, cattleyas. They are mostly Trianæ, with a few Schroederæ. Gardenias are all right in the upper grades, but there are too many poor ones to make the general average, in price, good.

Beauties are confined mostly to the specials; they are still obtainable in quantity by those who can afford them. There are a few fine Russell and Hadley roses. Outside of these, most of the roses are in the short and medium grades. Some extremely fine snapdragons are offered; choice lavender and yellow blooms bring good prices. Freesia is good.

The shipping demand is the life of the market.

While carnations have not been given their proper place in this report, they continue the mainstay of the market. The crop is almost as heavy as that of a week ago. It meets with a strong support, which is made stronger by those who are not able to have their rose orders filled in full.

William Craythorn, of Maple Shade.

There are most cordial people at Maple Shade; I may almost say that they are affectionate. It is not an unheard-of thing at Maple Shade to have an entirely strange man throw his arms about you at the moment of your getting off the train on your first and only visit, and asking you, in a joyous tone, whether you are going to Miss Netherwood's. It seemed really a shame to discourage such cordiality, but the greenhouses of William Craythorn proved as attractive in reality as their product had promised.

William Craythorn has a range of well built greenhouses devoted to a few staple crops. Just now his Purity freesias are in full bloom. For years he has grown his own bulbs, dried off and thoroughly ripened and replanted again year after year. The little bulblets he grew on to flowering size in a table by themselves. Now he has tried California flowering bulbs of Freesia Purity. He earnestly asserts that he will grow no other kind of freesia, never no more. The Purity freesias were in 6-inch pots, perhaps a dozen bulbs to the pot. They stood over two feet in height, each stem bearing a cluster of large flowers of waxy whiteness. The crop started outdoors in the frame at the end of July, and followed chrysanthemums in the greenhouse.

Carnations appeared to be the main crop. They all looked well. Beacon is the leading red; White Wonder, White Perfection and White Enchantress are the whites. The second will be discarded, the third increased. Alice and Enchantress are the pinks; both do well.

A Curious Case.

There is considerable interest shown among our florists over a law suit pending in this city. It appears that a customer purchased a cyclamen from Charles P. Poryzees, for which he paid $2.75, at Christmas. He claims that the salesman assured him that the plant would live a year. He asserts that in two days it wilted and, on being transferred to a larger pot, died.

The customer took the plant back to Mr. Poryzees and asked for a refund of his money, on the ground that the plant had not lived as promised. Mr. Poryzees said that, while he had no book record of this cash sale, he did not question the customer's word. He thought there had been negligence on the customer's part and offered him a credit of $2.75. This the customer declined, claiming his money; hence a suit.

The Shop Window.

The window described this week is open to the criticism of emptiness; yet if you could have seen it, it would not have appeared empty. Rather let me say it seemed like an elegant drawing room in which richness and effect were studied rather than display. There was no massing, no crowding. The show window of J. J. Habermehl's Sons, in the Bellevue-Stratford hotel, is of great size. Experts will tell you that the glare from the Manufacturers' Club opposite spoils its appearance in certain lights. That may be true, but it is a trifling disadvantage and one that is often absent. On this occasion there was no glare. It was dark and dismal outside. The window looked warm and inviting. The floor and sides were covered with a loosely laid carpet of pale green, which appeared more like a scarf of some soft texture. It harmonized wonderfully with the Cibotium Schiedei in the background at one side. In front of the fern was a vase or wall pocket that seemed overflowing with spring flowers. The flowers looked like the daffodils sometimes described as butter and eggs. The opposite side of the window was filled by one of the Boston sisters, while the center was occupied by a low arrangement of scarlet and white blooms, rising from a mirror pool in a way that challenges description. Behind the window, in the store beyond, an artist was arranging a bunch of flowers formed of calla lilies at the top and Rose Canadian Queen below, in a way that made it appear just as though the rosebud was showing out of the cornucopias of the callas.

The Valentine Kids.

It is encouraging to know that there is just as much, nay a little more, opportunity for inventive ingenuity today as during any time in the history of floral arrangement. A simple little novelty consisting of a droll-looking youthful figure, with an indescribable humorous look, and with a heart in one hand attached to a small flower vase. The figure is neatly dressed in warm garments suitable for the season. The vase is attached firmly in an inconspicuous place. There are a dozen styles. The whole is serviceable, neat and most appealing.

Sydney H. Bayersdorfer tells me that these Valentine kids are having an extraordinary run of popularity. While his modesty forbade the admission that he knew in whose brain the kids had originated, it was gathered that the hit the kids were making for his house

Various Notes.

William J. Baker is fortunate in receiving excellent sprays of Asparagus plumosus now.

William H. Vance, of Wilmington, has been most successful with sweet peas during the last two months.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

The Market.

There was a great scarcity of all kinds of stock during the last week, and especially high prices prevailed on roses. Everything was bought at sight. No orders for roses were filled completely. The lowest price on roses was $8, with the possible exception of a few culls at $6, and from that they went up to $20 per hundred. The standard prices seem to have been $12 and $15 per hundred. The greatest scarcity was in the red roses. Next in line of scarcity came the white roses, which were in heavy demand.

Carnations are the scarcest of all flowers. The price remains standard at $6 per hundred, but in all probability the situation will be less acute shortly and the price will recede. There are plenty of narcissi to be had and the retailers have had to resort to these for funeral pieces. It is the cheapest flower to be had for filling in, being obtainable at $3 per hundred. There have been fine Golden Spur daffodils, bringing as high as $6 per hundred.

Good cattleyas were offered at $7.50 and $9 per dozen, but there were few takers. There are plenty of cypripediums to be had and they hang fire at $1.50 per dozen. Gardenias are good and sell better than formerly, at $3 per dozen.

Sweet peas sell at sight, the ordinary varieties at $1 and $1.50 per hundred and the Spencers at $2 and $2.50.

THE original Album of Designs was published in response to many requests from florists who felt the need for an up-to-date book that could be used in taking orders for Funeral Designs, Wedding Decorations and Bouquets, Table Decorations and all cut flower work where it was not practicable to show the customer the finished article as it would be when ready for use. With the publication of this album it became possible to show the finished work in beautifully printed pictures. The first edition sold like hot cakes, a second and third edition went quickly. Now a fourth edition is off the press. Everything is in it—all the standard designs and many new pieces.

96 pages, nearly 300 designs and decorations, beautifully printed on heavy art paper, handsomely bound in a cover that will stand wear per hundred. Easter lilies are temporarily off the market; it seems as though all of the growers are out of these flowers. Mignonette and calendulas are helping to fill in, but otherwise the demand for these is light. Snapdragon is extremely scarce and high and any quality stock readily brings $2 per dozen.

Various Notes.

At the national rose festival of the American Rose Society, to be held at Philadelphia in March, over $6,000 in prizes are offered, and several of the growers around Washington have expressed their intention of competing. William F. Gude, of the Gude Bros. Co., is a member of the committee on commercial exhibits.

S. F. Pletcher, of Zanesville, O., was among the visitors at the local stores during the last week.

The local florists are beginning to receive tax bills covering the rental of sidewalk vaults.

The regular meeting of the Florists' Club of Washington, D. C., will be held February 6. As this is the first regular meeting before the annual election of officers, nominations will be in order. President Jenkins urges that all members attend. C. L. L.

The Market.

Business fluctuated somewhat during the week, but it was brisk and lively at the week end. Graduations have commenced and many orders are received for these functions, as well as for weddings, dances, etc.

Every grower and storekeeper is having his troubles just now. The dull weather is holding back the flowers considerably, and it is difficult to procure what is wanted in quantity. Everything in cut flowers is arriving in smaller consignments, and in many cases the blooms are not fully developed. Prices are considerably higher on some items, while others retain their previous figures. The supply of roses in the shorter grades is far from sufficient. Some extra fine Hoosier Beauty, Milady, Shawyer, Ward and Maryland roses are quickly disposed of. The carnation supply is limited, with much inferior stock, but any grade of carnations brings good prices. Orchids are good and sell well. Valley is irregular in quality and high in price. Easter lilies arrive in larger shipments and help to meet the large funeral demands. Callas are not plentiful.

Good freesias sell fast. Violets are improving in size and fragrance, but the demand does not seem so large as usual. Extra fine and long-stemmed sweet peas sell easily. Paper Whites, yellow narcissi and jonquils are more plentiful and move at sight. Lilacs are seen in small quantities. Romans and bachelor's buttons are easily disposed of. The supply of blooming plants is large, with the assortment good. The receipts of greens are large enough to supply present demands.

Various Notes.

Edward Brockman is doing a good business. His Enchantress Supreme carnations are in good form, with long stems and large blooms. He has a large quantity of White Wonder. One greenhouse is devoted entirely to geraniums and by spring he hopes to have about 40,000 plants. He has rented a nearby farm and expects to plant it to asters next season.

George Kerridge is receiving many calls for shrubs and plants, of which he has a large selection.

F. H. Moore, of the Sefton Mfg. Co., Chicago, called on the trade this week. We are glad to hear that Mr. Moore is to become a resident of Rochester. The trade will give him a good welcome.

The postage alone

(If 2-cent stamps were used)

Would Cost $250.00

If you attempted to send to every reader of The Review even a simple circular advertising your business.

The circular itself, the paper (it has increased 125 to 150% in price since the war), printing, envelopes, addressing, etc., would more than double the cost. And even at that, you would be forcing your proposition upon the attention of the people to whom you sent it.

On the Other Hand

No one who buys The Review is forced to do so. He reads it from choice.

Your business announcements stated in The Review come to the attention of the buyers you seek in a manner and at a time that is psychologically correct.

You can print in The Review a half page, each issue, for a whole year, for what one circular would cost if you attempted to reach the entire circulation of The Review just once.

The Comparison is Startling

The one distribution of 12,500 circulars would cost approximately $650.00—one "flash in the pan," then silence.

A half page in The Review would cost only $702.00 for a whole year; it would be seen, read and remembered, if not this week, then next week for 52 issues—650,000 copies.

Every modern business man knows the cumulative value of continuous effort.

Enchantress Supreme. His tulips and jonquils are in fine condition and yield large cuttings. He grew a large batch of freesias this year.

The annual convention of the Western New York Horticultural Society was held in Convention hall, January 24 to 26. There was a large attendance at most of the sessions, and great interest was shown in the competitive and non-competitive exhibits of fruits and in the exhibits of Geneva Experimental Station. The election of officers was keen and resulted as follows: President, Seth J. T. Bush, of Morton; vice-presidents, Charles K. Scoon, of Geneva; George T. Powell, of Ghent; B. D. Van Buren, of Riverville; Arthur Barry, of this city, son of the late president, William C. Barry; F. W. Clark, of Wyoming; Harry L. HIGH JINKS AT MORRISTOWN.

Tuesday, January 23, the Morris County Florists' and Gardeners' Society became of age, and it celebrated the twenty-first birthday of its organization in a manner appropriate for such an auspicious occasion. More than 150 persons participated in the anniversary banquet, which was held at Morristown, N. J. The menu for the evening, despite the fact that rarebit prices are after the aviation altitude record, was a lengthy test for even the most blase banqueteer, the feasters being required to stow away everything from anchovies on toast down through filet of sole with Tartar sauce and Camembert cheese to a glorious finish of creme de menthe and demi-tasse. The dinner committeemen surely outdid themselves, and it is hoped that everybody weathered the aftermath with nothing more than a well earned ache.

The decorations in the banquet hall resembled a flower show more than embellishments for an anniversary feast. The speakers' table was decorated with some of the varieties of roses that have made Charles H. Totty famous. At this table, over which R. G. Hollaman, the toastmaster, presided, sat Frank Breare, president of the society; Edward Reagan, secretary; W. H. Duckham, treas-

Gloekler Refrigerators

THE essential feature of a refrigerator for cut flowers is a cold, dry circulation of air. That is the fundamental principle of Gloekler Flower Refrigerators. The stock keeps to its full limit, and at the same time results in a saving of ice. It requires perfect insulation to produce this condition, and the Gloekler method of reinforced cork insulation has been proven by test the only practical way of producing such a result.

Gloekler Fixtures in Store of A. W. Smith Co., Pittsburgh.

The selling power of the refrigerator—that is a big point. These refrigerators display flowers so attractively that the flowers almost sell themselves. They present an insistent appeal to the customer to buy, but in an unobjectionable way.

urer; B. D. Evans, G. W. Downs and D. S. Voorhees.

After the first items on the banquet bill of fare had been negotiated, amateur entertainers among the members delivered several popular songs and a snappy "dago" dance. Thenceforth the speakers of the evening had the fur flying.

The toastmaster led with "What I know of the Cannibal or Insect Eating Plant." This address was calculated to last an hour and a half, but the speaker said he was in a deplorable state—he had come away from home without his paper. He pointed out that of the eight men who attended the organization meeting of the society twenty-one years ago, four were present—Messrs. Reagan, Totty, Herrington and Duckham.

Arthur Herrington, who had the honor of being the society's first head, was the next speaker. He said he had long anticipated the twenty-first anniversary, for on that night his infant, the society, became of age. He then related some reminiscences of the society in its infancy and spoke of the advancement of horticulture in New Jersey. Mayor Otto Ross, who was next called upon, admitted that he was a gardener as well as a mayor. Dr. B. D. Evans then paid a great tribute to the florists and said that, while not a florist, he is supposed to place flowers in the

FOR YOUR PROTECTION, MR. FLORIST,

For they are endorsed by the leading wholesale trade. REFUSE IMITATIONS

EXTRACTS FROM OUR ENDORSEMENTS

C. E. Critchell, of Cincinnati, Ohio, writes: "My customers insist on having the 'Superiora' brand of Magnolias, as they claim these are the best, and that they do not dry out or become moldy, and that every leaf can be used, and when this is taken into consideration, they are also the cheapest, besides being the best."

The McCallum Co., of Pittsburgh, Pa., says: "Other Magnolia preparers have tried to induce us to stock up their goods 'just as good as Dux's' at a cheaper price, but we have in each instance told them frankly that it was a case of quality with us, and that we did not think their leaf would give the satisfaction yours did. We consider our Magnolia trade one of the best assets of our business and will not take a chance of losing it; in fact, our traveling men are often greeted as 'Magnolia Kings.'"

Pittsburgh Cut Flower Co., of Pittsburgh, Pa., writes: "Your 'Superiora' Magnolia Leaves are the best leaves that we have ever handled, and we have had no complaint from any of our customers who bought these leaves from us. We have stored these leaves under all conditions and found that they will not mould; it is a very satisfactory leaf indeed."

Jos. G. Neidinger Co., of Philadelphia, Pa., says: "We have tried all the Magnolia Leaves that are offered, but find your leaves to be far superior to all others, etc., etc."

The Montreal Floral Exchange, Montreal, Canada, writes: "Our business has increased with you this year over double of what we purchased last season, which is a good recommendation in itself that the trade in Canada appreciates the durability and keeping qualities of your leaf. We appreciate the integrity, promptness and good business methods that have characterized all your dealings with us."

Michigan Cut Flower Exchange, Detroit, Mich., says: "We have been handling your 'Superiora' Magnolia Leaves for the past six years and find in all this time that we have had no complaints but many compliments on these goods., etc., etc."

Jos. E. Koppelman, of Providence, R. I., writes: "We feel that we can sell your leaves to people who have used them once without any trouble. They rather pay the difference than to buy other leaves elsewhere, etc., etc."

New England Florist Supply Co., of Boston, Mass., writes: "Have found 'Superiora' Magnolias the best leaves on the market. The sales on this leaf have been growing with the same rapidity as our business."

Wm. F. Kasting Co., of Buffalo, N. Y., writes: "Have always found that the 'Superiora' brand gives our customers entire satisfaction; in fact, they are the best leaves we have been able to obtain in the last few years."

B. E. and J. T. Cokely, of Scranton, Penn., write: "We have always considered your Magnolia Leaves to be a standard for quality, etc."

The Baltimore Wholesale Florist and Supply Co., of Baltimore, Md., writes: "We are confident that any other manufactured Magnolia Leaves could not compete with yours, as other brands have been offered us, which, after we tried them, we refused to carry in stock."

N. F. McCarthy and Co., of Boston, Mass., write: ". . . It is the opinion of McCarthy and Co. that your good firm prepares the best leaf that has yet been offered in the United States. It is well worth the difference between the prices offered by inferior manufacturers and your agents."

Henry M. Robinson and Co., of Boston, Mass., write: "We are pleased to state that the quality of your leaves is certainly the best ever manufactured in this country, and it is a pleasure to offer such stock for sale, etc."

Reed and Keller, of New York City, say: ". . . and we beg leave to acknowledge receipt of your last shipment of Magnolias, and we are indeed pleased to say that they are superior in every way. We further state that our experience in leaves from other dealers has been very unsatisfactory; colors vary and leaves mould quickly, etc."

The Cleveland Florists' Exchange, Cleveland, O., says: ". . . never as yet have we had a complaint on the 'Superiora' brand of Magnolia Leaves, nor a carton returned."

Smith and Young, of Indianapolis, Ind., write: "We will continue to use 'Superiora' exclusively as we consider it superior to any other leaf in the market. Since we handle 'Superiora' we have not had one single complaint, etc., etc."

The Cleveland Cut Flower Co., of Cleveland, Ohio, writes: ". . . that we have been sending you orders for 'Superiora' brand Magnolia Leaves for several years should prove that we like your goods . . ."

Geo. H. Angermueller, of St. Louis, Mo., says: "It pleases me to say that I have worked up a splendid business on your 'Superiora' Magnolia Leaves, and I credit my success to the fact that the quality of your leaves has always been entirely satisfactory to my customers, etc."

Oscar Leistner, of Chicago, Ill., writes: ". . . As you know, before you gave us the sole agency for the Western country, we were handling a different leaf, but these leaves gave us no end of trouble and our customers were very much disappointed with the quality. Since we have been handling your leaves we find that the complaints from our customers have entirely disappeared, and the trade seems anxious to buy your leaves exclusively. Only today one of our customers told us that he had bought 100 cartons of Magnolias from one of your competitors, but that he has been compelled to return them as his customers absolutely refused to accept them, due to the fact that the leaves are 'off-color' as well as mouldy, etc."

human pathway. The medico was succeeded by J. Austin Shaw, New York representative of The Review, who gave a toast to the press and the absent ladies. Mr. Shaw was followed by Charles Weathered, of New York; Edward Reagan, on "The Individual Member"; W. H. Duckham; A. T. Boddington, of New York; W. G. Badgley, of Chatham; George W. Downs and "Uncle Dan" Voorhees.

At the close of his address Mr. Reagan made a presentation speech and presented to William H. Duckham a diamond stick pin, as an expression of the estimation in which Mr. Duckham is held by the members of the society. Mr. Duckham was greatly surprised and feelingly thanked the members.

BRAMPTON, ONT.

The Market.

The weather continued cold and clear throughout January and the stock available was not equal to the demand. Business has been good and shows every indication of keeping ahead of that of last year. Collections leave no room for complaint. Conditions generally are hopeful, except that the increased cost of everything reduces the possibility of profits almost to a negligible factor for most of the growers in the Dominion.

Daffodils and tulips are eagerly sought, the former easily bringing $4 per hundred while other blooms are so scarce. Orchids are not so plentiful this week and the best Cattleya Trianæ blooms easily make 30 cents. Easter lilies are being forced in larger quantities than usual and are much in request the year around. The shortage of greens makes it difficult for most florists, and the likelihood of valley becoming scarcer as the season progresses does not brighten the immediate prospect. American Beauties now are so scarce that money could not buy even a single dozen in Toronto this week.

Various Notes.

The scarcity of flowers has its bright side, for it has left the public more money to give to the Patriotic and Red Cross campaign, which in four days benefited to the extent of over $3,000,000.

H. McLellan, of Hammond, Ind., was here this week; also F. Brown, of the Gasser Co., Cleveland, O. W. G. P.

DOG GRASS IN LAWNS.

Will you please let me know what is the best way to get rid of dog grass in a newly made lawn? The lawn is completely covered with it. There are ten acres of lawn. J. J. N.—Mass.

This grass, also called crab grass and wire grass, comes in late summer, not only in new but also in old lawns. The plant is an annual and the first frost kills it. In small lawns it can be pulled or dug out. On larger areas every effort should be made to prevent it from seeding. Mow the lawn closely, then rake over the grass. This will pull up a lot of the dog grass, which is prostrate in its habit. Run the lawn mowers over again and, to still farther reduce it, give another raking in the opposite direction and mow once more. Keep this up for a week or two and you will get rid of most of this noxious weed, which asserts itself most when the weather is hot and dry and when regular lawn grasses are more or less parched. C. The Market.

The business done last week was most satisfactory to the wholesalers. Although there was considerable stock coming in daily, it was not enough for the volume of business, and prices as a result advanced. The most noticeable shortage was in roses, and the few coming in demanded an increase in prices. Ophelia and Russell were in great demand. The best Beauties brought $6 per dozen. The Killarneys and Sunburst cleaned up daily. Red roses are far short of the demand. Carnations are bringing $4 per hundred for first quality stock. Clean-ups in these were reported daily, Enchantress being the leader in demand. Good red and rose-pink carnations also had a big call. The fine weather should bring out a big crop for this week's trade.

Sweet peas last week cleaned up well. Extra fancy blooms of the butterfly type bring $1.50 per hundred, and the demand far exceeds the supply. Violets are selling well at 50 cents. Choice stock brings $4 in thousand lots. The Kirkwood growers report a big crop of violets for St. Valentine's day. There was a fine supply of orchids all the week, the many social events creating a large demand for these. Easter lilies and callas are scarce, also valley. Paper Whites, Romans, jonquils and other bulbous stock, usually plentiful at this time, were scarce last week. Smilax, asparagus and fine adiantum had a good call throughout the week.

Various Notes.

The St. Louis Florists' Club will hold its monthly meeting February 8, when a carnation exhibition will be staged. The place of meeting has not yet been made known. Growers of new varieties of carnations will find it to their advantage to send a few blooms for exhibition. The flowers may be sent in care of any of the wholesalers, who will stage them.

George Walters, the wire worker, reports a busy season since the new year began. E. Rogers is again with Mr. Walters, who has worked up a good shipping trade.

Do not forget the meeting of the St.

Louis County Growers' Association to be held February 7 at the Eleven Mile House. The feature of this meeting will be reports of the Carnation Society convention by members who attended the meeting this week.

Ernest Lapp has bought the retail interests of the J. F. Ammann Co., of Edwardsville, Ill. He has opened a store in the city, known as the Palace of Sweets and Flowers. Mr. Lapp spent a day in the wholesale district last week buying supplies.

The midwinter school graduations January 26 caused a big demand for flowers.

The St. Louis party to attend the American Carnation Society's meeting at Indianapolis left January 31. The following made the trip: Jules Bourdet, August Hummert, H. G. Berning, David S. Geddis, W. J. Pilcher, J. J. Windler, C. A. Kuehn, S. E. Cerny, Charles Meyer, F. C. Weber, Sr., Vincent Gorly, Otto G. Koenig and Fred H. Meinhardt. The ladies in the party were Mrs. H. G. Berning, Mrs. F. C. Weber, Sr., Mrs. J. J. Windler, Mrs. V. Gorly and Mrs. W. A. Rowe. The party made the trip in a special car over the Pennsylvania railroad and arrived in Indianapolis at 3 p. m. the same day.

Paul Hranicka, who has charge of the John Milliken greenhouse range at Crescent, Mo., is having wonderful success with Ophelia, Russell and Beauties; also, one of the finest crops of the Killarneys.

August Hartman is cutting a splendid crop of Spencer sweet peas from one of his houses at Kirkwood. His carnation crop also is of fine quality.

Samuel Roth, formerly with Grimm & Gorly and more recently of the A. L. Young Co., now is manager for the Diemer Floral Co., on South Broadway. Mr. Roth reports a busy week in social and funeral work.

James Bishoff has been added to the sales department of the St. Louis Wholesale Cut Flower Co. His brother, Stanley, has taken his old position as chauffeur.

ment on McPherson avenue is one of the attractive spots in the west end. Business has been rushing.

William Bouche and L. P. Jensen, who will have charge of the decorating corps for the spring flower show to be held at the Armory hall next month, are hard at work making plans for the big job. Two better men for this work would be hard to find.

R. A. McPheron, of the Cottage Greenhouses, Litchfield, Ill., was a visitor last week.

The meeting of the executive committee and the various chairmen of the spring flower show committees was held at the offices of the St. Louis Seed Co. Reports were heard from all the chairmen. The reports of August Hummert, of the guarantee fund; J. J. Windler, of the program; W. J. Pilcher, for the trades' displays; Frank Windler, for publicity, and W. A. Rowe, for finance, were most gratifying. A meeting of these men will be held every Tuesday afternoon at the same place from now until the time of the show. J. F. Ammann, president of the American Carnation Society, was present and urged all to try to attend the meeting at Indianapolis. J. J. B.

BOSTON.

The Market.

Prices continue to hold up in first-class shape and no immediate break seems probable. Flowers open slowly, owing to the continuation of wintry weather and many sunless days. Roses still clean up well. There is a slight weakening in prices of short-stemmed stock, but on other lines there is practically no change. American Beauties remain unchanged and sell out easily. Better grades of Hadley, Russell, Ward and Ophelia are soon bought up. White Killarney is the only rose which drags somewhat. Carnations hold their own.

All now are of top-notch quality. The leaders are Pink Delight, Alice, Matchless, Ward, Benora, White Wonder and Rosette. The best violets have made $1, with poorer grades as low as 50 to 60 cents per hundred.

Bulbous flowers sell well. Daffodils are unchanged; tulips, also, move in good shape. Narcissus ornatus, Campernelle and Silver Spur are now noted. Freesia is dragging more than it did. Lilies are abundant; so are callas; but there is no great surplus of either. Yellow marguerites are in good demand and good flowers realize as much as carnations. Sweet peas are in good supply, with the Spencers selling best. Snapdragons are not at all plentiful, but of mignonette there is an oversupply. There still is a good supply of stevia, with smaller lots of calendulas, wallflowers, primroses and other miscellaneous flowers. Cattleyas are more abundant and cheaper. There also are cypripediums, dendrobiums, phalænopsis, vandas and lælias available. Valley sells somewhat slowly, but asparagus moves a little better.

Various Notes.

There is no neater, more up-to-date and more interesting carnation establishment in the vicinity of Boston than that of John Barr, at South Natick. Mr. Barr, while superintendent on the B. P. Cheney estate, was one of the largest and most successful exhibitors of pot plants at the Boston shows. He has now dropped the culture of even his old-time favorites, cyclamens, and sticks to carnations. His houses are on an ideal site, with plenty of splendid land adjoining. Water is inexpensively pumped from the nearby Charles river. A herd of cattle keeps some of Mr. Barr's wealthy neighbors supplied with milk and cream and gives him the necessary manure for his houses. Kroeschell Bros. Co. heaters are used and give complete satisfaction. The carnations most extensively grown are Pink Delight and Matchless, which do wonderfully well here. Benora is liked as a variegated variety and Beacon as a scarlet. The old Fenn still does remarkably well and will be planted at least one more year. Alice is grown largely, but the plants were chopped back for cuttings, which were in heavy demand. Nancy here is inferior to Pink Delight. Mr. Barr says it comes too single. Good Cheer is grown as a rose-pink, but Albert Roper will take its place next year. Alice Coombs also does well here. It sells splendidly and is a good keeper. The propagating house was a treat; everything is so clean and thrifty.

Paine Bros., of Randolph, are cutting fine lots of Flamingo, White Hawk, La Reine and Couronne d'Or tulips and Golden Spur narcissi. Their Hupp motor Edward Winkler, of Wakefield, well known as the raiser of that popular carnation, Morning Glow, failed to attend the recent field day of the club at Framingham. He had a good reason to be absent, however—the arrival of a bouncing boy. I am glad to report mother and son as doing well.

Peter Hylen, of Randolph, is a successful bulb specialist and is at present cutting an excellent lot of Fred Moore, La Reine and White Hawk tulips and Golden Spur narcissi. Mr. Hylen now feels the need of an auto truck, but is as yet undecided as to which make to purchase.

Tickets are selling like the proverbial hot cakes for the Gardeners' and Florists' Club thirtieth annual banquet, which will be held in Horticultural hall February 7. The souvenir booklet containing advertisements has made a decided hit and business concerns are supporting it handsomely. No tickets for the banquet will be sold after February 5.

William H. Elliott, of Brighton, left January 24 for Berkeley, Cal. He will make many stops and take a number of side trips, both going and returning, and as he is an interesting conversationalist as well as a keen observer, he should have something interesting to say on his return, which will not be until May or early June. Mr. Elliott's daughter is a professor in a university at Berkeley.

F. J. Lake, of Wellesley Hills, whose obituary is given elsewhere in this week's issue, was one of the oldest of our local florists and was well known as a stallholder at the old Park street flower market.

The Arnold Arboretum, the Mecca for lovers of hardy trees and shrubs, has for some time employed a sportsman two days a week to shoot sparrows, crows and squirrels in the Arboretum grounds. The crows and squirrels undoubtedly kill many young birds and destroy their eggs. The sparrows do no harm so far as I can learn, but, on the other hand, destroy quantities of destructive insects and noxious weed seeds which our native birds leave severely alone.

The Gardeners' and Florists' Club will hold its annual carnation night February 20. There will be short talks by three carnation specialists and a notable display of flowers. The mem-

F. E. Palmer, of Brookline, has incorporated his business, taking in several members of his family as partners. He has a large and increasing landscape gardening business and now has a nice nursery on recently acquired land near his Newton street home. His store business has been good this winter.

Six members of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society have given guarantees of $1,000 each toward the big June show to be held on the grounds of the Wentworth Institute. The total guarantees amount to over $12,000, and an impressive show is assured.

The Houghton-Gorney Co., on Tremont street, has a fine display of chorizemas, acacias and ericas of the waxy type. This concern's window displays are most attractive.

The Market.

Business continues good. There is an adequate supply of stock, but prices keep up well. Carnations are coming in satisfactorily. While sweet peas are more plentiful, some complain that it is hard to get them in quantity. Good Easter lilies are more abundant but higher in price. Callas are good but expensive, the best costing $3 per dozen. White lilacs are more plentiful, as well as potted tulips. Jonquils are coming in more freely. There has been quite an addition to the supply of marguerites during the last week. Boston ferns are selling well.

Various Notes.

The S. A. Rogers Nursery Co. has moved to new quarters at 453 Broad street, where the late Jacob H. Harvey conducted a flower store for many years.

Charles Witheridge reports that business this January has been better than that of January last year, but that prices are so high that there is not the profit in sales there should be.

August C. Begerow had an attractive window last week. In the center was a mass of marguerites arranged in pyramid form. Around the base of this pyramid were pots of pink azaleas.

R. B. M

NEWPORT, R. I.

Mr. and Mrs. Andrew S. Meikle last week were pleasantly surprised at their home when a score of their friends called to congratulate them on their twenty-fifth wedding anniversary. A supper was served and a most enjoyable evening spent, with music, games and dancing. Mr. and Mrs. Meikle received numerous gifts.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward R. Hass have returned from a visit to New York city.

C. S. Ritchie is preparing to plant the last greenhouse which has undergone reconstruction to sweet peas. This completes the overhauling and reconstruction of his entire range.

Seed Trade News

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION

President, Kirby B. White, Detroit, Mich.; Secretary-Treasurer, C. E. Kendel, Cleveland, O.

CONTRACT prices on all seeds, and especially on beans and peas, are steadily advancing.

CHARLES P. GUELF, of the Jerome B. Rice Seed Co., is on a trip through the northeast.

THE pioneer seedsman of Bismarck, S. D., Oscar H. Will, has been seriously ill at Bismarck hospital, but while still confined to his bed at the hospital, is slowly recovering.

PAPER and printing cost even more in England than now is the case in the United States and most British trade catalogues for 1917 show a sharp retrenchment.

ONION sets advanced sharply last week. The supply is being steadily reduced by shipment and present indications are that it will be difficult to obtain good stock by the early part of March.

THE canners' convention will attract a considerable number of seedsmen to Cleveland February 5 to 9. Conditions in the canning trade are such that the largest convention on record is expected and seedsmen's representatives are looking forward to an active week's business.

THE Holland salesmen came over this season under instructions to get higher prices, especially from the small buyers out in the country, whose orders have been costing too much. But it isn't proving as easy as it would have been had there not been so many cheap offers at the close of last season.

THE Sweet Pea Annual, issued by the National Sweet Pea Society of England, makes America a conspicuous feature of the 1917 issue, just to hand. It contains full-page portraits of the late W. Atlee Burpee and of George W. Kerr, with an appreciation of the former and an article by the latter, with much other material of American origin.

THE Sioux City Seed & Nursery Co., of Sioux City, Ia., has been granted a refund by the Interstate Commerce Commission of $363.68, to be paid by the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Co., on account of an excessive rate charged on three cars of clover seed from Cowley and Lovell, Wyo., and Silesia, Mont., to Sioux City, in December, 1915.

A MEETING of the Wholesale Grass Seed Dealers' Association was held at Chicago January 29, at which the matter of trade rules and seed legislation were discussed. About fifteen firms were represented. E. Brown, botanist in charge of the seed laboratory of the bureau of plant industry of the U. S. Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., was among those present.

We have over and above our contract requirements for 1916 and 1917

A Surplus of High-grade Vegetable and Flower Seeds

which we offer at attractive prices considering market conditions at home and abroad. Our contracts were placed with the largest and most reliable growers in the world, and their names will be furnished upon request.

Never was such an opportunity for seedsmen as to be able to supply beans this year. The price is high but no seed will cost the grower less. Nothing can be substituted for beans. A quart of beans will go farther than the same value of any other seed. We are booking orders for delivery crop of 1917. Write for prices. Our growing facilities are good. We grow our seed stock on our own farms. We specialize in Dwarf Garden Beans and feel that we can give seedsmen the best of service and larger average deliveries than other growers located farther from the center of growing operations. We are about booked up on Wax Beans and the finer types of Green Pods, so urge prompt inquiry.

ARCHIAS SEED STORE, Box 84, SEDALIA, MO.

Sixty kinds of beans and peas are grown in China, but few of these find a place in the export trade.

The stocks of America gladiolus are believed to lie principally in two hands this season, and prices quoted earlier in the season have been advanced twenty-five per cent.

Among those who will have booths at the National Canners' Convention at Cleveland February 5, is the Leonard Seed Co., Chicago, whose exhibit will be in charge of John C. Leonard.

The seed trade's advertising this season will be light, because of the belief that demand will exceed supply, and practically confined to class publications, because of the belief that the use of general publications does not pay as well.

DETROIT NEXT JUNE.

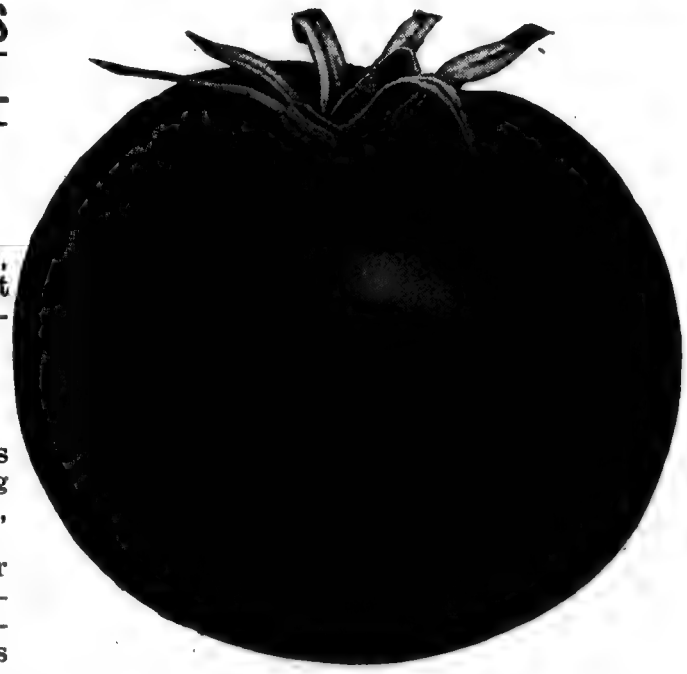
The executive committee of the American Seed Trade Association has designated Detroit as the place for the thirty-fifth annual convention, to be held next June.

The committee held its annual midwinter meeting at New York, January 30. Those present were President Kirby B. White, Detroit; Secretary C. E. Kendel, Cleveland; J. M. Lupton, Mattituck, L. I.; Leonard H. Vaughan, Chicago; Howard M. Earl, Philadelphia; W. G. Scarlett, Baltimore; J. L. Hunt, Cambridge, N. Y., which is the full committee with the exception of the vice-presidents. By invitation there also were present W. S. Woodruff, M. H. Duryea and Charles D. Boyles.

AUSTRALIAN SEED CROPS.

In Australia seasonal conditions are the reverse of our own and 1916-1917 seed crops there are approaching the harvest time. With reference to the crop prospect, F. H. Brunning, Ltd., by Leslie H. Brunning, secretary, says under date of December 19:

"We have had heavy rains during 1916, the fall to date being thirty-eight inches. The average for the last forty years is twenty-five inches, and last year's total for the same period was twenty and one-half inches. As the bulk of the rain has fallen since September and has been accompanied by heavy hail from time to time, you will understand the crops have suffered severely. In the Portarlington district, what has not been washed out will bear well, but even so we cannot look for more than a fifty per cent return. The carrot and parsnip crops we are afraid will be almost total failures, owing to the fact that, on top of the floods, the Rutherglen fly has made its appearance.



"At time of writing, it is hard to give an opinion on the onion crop, but it seems to us that it will not be a heavy one."

ACTION FOR SHORT DELIVERY.

The California Lima Bean Growers' Association is likely to be brought into court in the near future to ascertain whether or not it can be compelled to make good its obligations to deliver future goods. S. Pfeifer, a New Orleans jobber, has sued the organization and has rather got the start of the bean men by tying up money due them, now in the Louisiana jurisdiction. It appears that Pfeifer got a portion of the beans for which he contracted and January 20 paid a draft for $4,683.10. Then

TOMATO SEED FOR YOUR 1917 CROP

You will get an enormous crop of Tomatoes from Bolgiano's Tomato Seed this year. Our Seed was saved from one of the largest crops we have ever had, due to being favored by weather conditions. The vines were loaded with Large, Solid, Red Fruit. We know positively by planting Seed from this "Big Crop" your yield will be much larger than if you had bought seed grown where the weather conditions were not favorable.

Burpee's Seeds Grow

BURPEE'S ANNUAL
The Leading American Seed Catalog

With the close of 1916 forty years of Burpee Effort have passed into Seed History. These were constructive years, years of careful, intensive, scientific investigation and experimenting. Starting in a very modest way, acre after acre, building after building, have been added until today we enjoy the distinction of being the World's Largest Mail Order Seed House.

The House of Burpee

in this forty years has introduced more distinct new varieties of Vegetable and Flower Seeds that are now in general cultivation, than have any three other American Seed Firms, but never have we cataloged any one of these varieties until it has passed all the exacting requirements of the Burpee Standard. This Burpee Standard is maintained by rigid tests at Fordhook Farms, America's largest and most complete Trial Grounds. These tests are made each year for the purpose of strengthening the bond of confidence between our customers and ourselves.

With the culmination of these forty years we enter the fifth decade of our active business life, with the firm intention of continuing to Better Serve.

Burpee Annual for 1917

The Leading American Seed Catalog is bigger, better and brighter than ever before. Twenty-two pages have been added, and best of all, you will find thirty Burpee Specialties illustrated in color. Never before have we issued a catalog with so many accurate color illustrations.

Florists and Market Gardeners, in addition to Burpee's Annual, should have Burpee's Blue List, the Market Growers' Handbook. This is a wholesale price list for commercial planters. Write for these catalogs today. A post card will bring them.

HENRY F. MICHELL CO., 518 Market Street, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Pfeifer's lawyer went to the Civil District court with a claim for $2,000 potential profit on undelivered beans and asked the court to seize the $4,683.10. Bailiffs soon had the money tied up. The idea of paying drafts and then seizing the money to secure profits lost by the failure of the bean barons to come across with beans is a new one.

The New Orleans merchants claim the crop was not so badly damaged as contended and that the association and its commission merchants are selling at the market price in other cities instead of delivering here at the contract price. The difference is 2 cents a pound. Profits on a car in ordinary times run from $150 to $200. The difference between a car at contract and at market price today is $800 to $1,000. The dealers are much distressed by the impression that the growers are pocketing $800 to $1,000 a car and delivering excuses instead of beans.

SEEDSMEN'S LIENS.

Lien on Crop For Seeds' Price.

The laws of the states in which retail seedsmen are given liens against crops for the price of seeds furnished to grow the crops, have given rise to considerable litigation of practical importance to the trade, concerning the right to enforce liens.

The Supreme Court of North Dakota was called upon to determine whether a person who in good faith furnishes seed is entitled to a lien for the entire purchase price, regardless of whether all of the seeds were actually sown. In deciding the point in favor of the right to lien, the court said:

"We think it clear, under the statute in question, that a person who furnishes seeds to another to be sown upon certain land is entitled, upon compliance with the statute, to a lien for the purchase price of all seeds so furnished upon the crop grown from such seeds or any portion of such seeds. In other words, it is not incumbent upon the seller of the seeds to see to it at his peril that all such seeds are actually sown as agreed."

One Lien for Each Crop.

In the same case another question was raised, as to whether, under the North Dakota seed lien law, a person furnishing two or more kinds of seeds under a single contract might perfect a lien effective against all the crops produced from the two kinds of seeds for the entire purchase price. The court said that this was a doubtful question, and refused to pass on it directly, because, under the peculiar facts of the case before the court, it was unnecessary to decide the point. It appeared that 200 bushels of seed wheat and sixty bushels of seed flax had been sold to the same person at different prices per bushel, and that the seller filed a single lien statement for the whole price, claiming a lien against both crops, but specifying the number of bushels of each kind of seed furnished, and the price per bushel. On these facts, the court held that the contract should be regarded as divisible as to the two kinds of seed, and the lien construed as separate as to each crop—one upon the wheat crop for the value of the seeds furnished for it, and one on the flax crop for the value of the seeds furnished for it.

But it is clear that no lien can be enforced under a seed-grain note, unless seeds have been actually furnished for the crop against which the lien is asserted. In another interesting case it appeared that a seed-grain note was taken for grain furnished for a certain crop. The note was not paid and the lien was not enforced, but the seedsman took a new note in renewal of the old one, and in the same lien form. Under these circumstances, the Minnesota Supreme court decided that no lien could be enforced against the new crop, for which the seedsman furnished no seeds, as against a third person to whom the farmer gave a chattel mortgage after the renewal note was executed. The court said of the renewal note:

Another Aspect.

"Though duly filed, it did not entitle the plaintiff to claim any other than the specific lien therein provided, upon grain raised from seeds furnished by the defendant. But it is admitted that the note was not given for seeds from which the grain in controversy was raised, and that the defendant furnished no seed grain to the maker of it that year. No lien was therefore created under the statute."

On failure of the buyer of seeds to pay therefor, the seller, having properly preserved his lien, is entitled to take possession of the crop for the purpose of foreclosure, or he may enforce the lien as against the holder of a subordinate lien who has taken possession. If the junior lienor disposes of the property, the seedsman may hold him liable as for conversion of the crop. (Minnesota Supreme court, Nash versus Brewster, 41 Northwestern Reporter, 105.)

But when the buyer of seeds fails to make settlement and the seedsman permits him to retain part of the grain covered by the lien for the purpose of growing a crop for the succeeding year, taking a new lien note for the wheat so retained, a lien may be enforced against the new crop, according to another decision of the Minnesota Supreme court. The court holds that a new lien note may not be taken as a device to secure a preëxisting debt, and that a lien may be enforced only against the crop for which seed was furnished by the lien claimant, but that it is not necessary that the seedsman have had actual possession of the seed or that he make actual manual delivery thereof to the

MOTT-LY GLEANINGS.

Manager Harry Holmes, of the Holmes-Letherman Seed Co., Canton, O., tells me that his house has secured land in Montana for the purpose of seed growing. "Our experience in Idaho is most satisfactory," said Mr. Holmes, "and with our home farm of 160 acres it will give us the opportunity we need to grow and try out stocks before distributing seeds to our patrons. Of a supply of Golden Wax beans purchased from three growers, two lots proved true to type, the third developed runners. It has become necessary to raise as much of our own seed as we possibly can. We have engaged J. J. Garland, of the University of Wisconsin, to take charge of the home farm." A fine lot of Stowell's Evergreen and Golden Bantam sweet corn was noted.

The Van Gorder-Hapgood Seed Co., of Warren, O., is installing a complete set of seed fixtures, to enable the force to better handle the steadily increasing trade.

The management of the Moody Seed Store, of Youngstown, O., says it beats all how the aliens of its large clientele surpass the natives in producing the best vegetables seen in town. The foreigners are critical seed buyers.

The Livingston Seed Co., of Columbus, O., reports a good call for seed for early sowing. The retail store is advertising seeds and feeds for wild birds, and is making good sales, in addition to creating considerable interest. Manager Sherry predicts a banner season and is preparing for it. W. M.

CATALOGUES RECEIVED.

Northrup, King & Co., Minneapolis, Minn.—Thirty-third annual catalogue of "Sterling" seeds, plants, bulbs, tools, nursery stock and supplies; a notably comprehensive book of 160 well illustrated pages, in a tasteful, distinctive cover. At the beginning is an explanation of the purposes of the firm's seven brands or trademarks, which, it is said, "are not merely names and symbols, but represent real standards of quality." On account of the extraordinary market fluctuations, prices are not quoted on some items, especially in clover and millet, but enclosed with the catalogue is a "Red Figure Price List," which "supplements and supersedes the prices in the catalogue on all grass and field seeds and poultry feeds." The cental system generally is used, though some items are priced both by pound and bushel.

Burton Seed Co., Denver, Colo.—"Burton's 1917 Seed Book," offering seeds, bulbs, plants and sundries; eighty-four pages, illustrated, and cover. "Never were good seeds so scarce," says the company; "it is not so much a question of price as being able to secure them at all." This is one of the few seed catalogues in which the cental system of pricing seems to have been fully adopted.

George Holst, Jr., Landscape Gardener, Flushing, N. Y.—A persuasive appeal, in the form of a well written, well illustrated brochure of sixteen pages; not a catalogue in the ordinary sense of the word, as it quotes no prices, but it briefly describes some of the possibilities in landscape work and gives some suggestions in regard to the stock to be used.

William Toole & Son, Baraboo, Wis.—An 8-page wholesale list of hardy perennials, also pansy plants and seeds, with suggestions as to what perennials are best suited for cut flowers. Included is a selection of fourteen varieties of peonies.

Austin-Coleman Co., Wayland, O.—An attractive 12-page catalogue of Elm Hill gladioli, hardy chrysanthemums, dahlias and tuberous begonias. In the first two or three pages are listed a number of gladioli originated by the company, several of them "now offered for the first time"; then follow some "leading productions of other growers." There are three illustrations, one of which shows Gladiolus Evelyn Kirtland and the little lady for whom the variety is named.

L. E. Williams, Exeter, N. H.—A neat, blue-covered 16-page price list of collected native trees, shrubs and plants; the hard-wooded stock varies in measurement from large specimens to small sizes for lining up in the nursery. Mr. Williams also states that he makes a specialty of collecting native tree and plant seeds in different parts of the country.

Geo. H. Mellen Co., Springfield, O.—Plants, bulbs, seeds, nursery stock and miscellaneous supplies; ninety-six freely illustrated pages, in a colored cover. Sixteen pages are devoted to roses, of which only own-root stock is offered. Among the specialties are "frost-proof" cabbage plants.

Warnaar & Co., Sassenheim, Holland.—A catalogue of dahlias, mostly of the peony-flowered class and all raised by H. Hornsveld, the specialist of Baarn, Holland. The booklet also contains a brief account of Mr. Hornsveld's experimental work and there is a portrait of Mr. Hornsveld on the cover. Colored pictures of two new dahlias are enclosed.

A. E. Kunderd, Goshen, Ind.—A beautifully illustrated 40-page catalogue of gladioli of the Kunderdi type, with directions for culture and storage. "The gladioli described in this catalogue," says Mr. Kunderd, "are all of our own production and quite different, especially the ruffled varieties, from any other strains." A page is devoted to explaining "why we catalogue only our own productions." Among the varieties offered are seven of "an entirely new race, now first offered."

G. H. Hunkel Co., Milwaukee, Wis.—Wholesale list of seeds, "for florists and market gardeners," a comprehensive though condensed catalogue, devoting about equal space to vegetable and flower seeds, with offerings, also, of bulbs, insecticides, tools and sundries; sixteen pages, illustrated. Attention is drawn to the scarcity of certain seeds, such as beans, sweet corn and spinach.

Wm. Elliott & Sons, New York, N. Y.—A 44-page wholesale seed catalogue, "for the trade only." In addition to seeds and bulbs, the lists comprise large assortments of other lines of stock, such as tools, fertilizers and other horticultural requisites. Grass seeds are a specialty. The receipt of this company's general catalogue was announced in The Review of January 25.

Werter De Vaughn, Omaha, Neb.—Two seed catalogues, general and wholesale. The general catalogue is illustrated, contains 112 pages, besides the colored cover, and offers bulbs, plants, roses, nursery stock and a full line of supplies, as well as seeds. The wholesale list is condensed to sixteen pages and cover, in narrow pocket form, and is devoted almost entirely to seeds. The cental system is followed in quoting prices. Tree seeds are included.

Farmer Seed & Nursery Co., Faribault, Minn.—A book so closely packed with text, in spite of the illustrations, that its 128 pages contain lists of almost everything which is likely to be wanted in seeds, nursery stock or supplies. Grass and forage seeds are especially prominent and more than ordinary attention is given to mixtures for both lawn and pasture. "There will be many shortages in seed stocks this year," says the company.

Milton Nursery Co., Milton, Ore.—General catalogue of nursery stock, roses, perennials and other plants; forty pages, illustrated, in a tasteful cover. The nursery department comprises nut trees, as well as the usual lines of fruit-bearing and ornamental stock. The rose list occupies ten pages.

Schultz's Seed Store, Washington, D. C.—An accurate, well printed catalogue of seeds, bulbs, roots, plants, tools and sundries; sixty-four pages and cover. The implements make a particularly good showing, occupying the greater part of sixteen pages and including nearly everything from plows and horse rakes down to dibbles and hand weeders.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—B. L. Elliott, of the John Bader Co., estimates the cost of doing business this season as having increased at least seventy-five per cent as compared with last season.

PEARSON'S MONEYWORTH QUALITY

THE BULB Agent's persistent effort, coupled with his various excuses and reasons for placing your order now at a high price, should in itself be reason enough for you, Mr. Florist, to ponder over.

Frankly, does it not sound possible that there is something wrong somewhere?

Does it not look as if the Dutchmen are especially anxious to get all the business they can at a good, high figure?

Well, never mind the market. If it goes down, do you get the benefit of a lower price? If it rises, will you get what you contracted for? It does not matter which way it may go—the auction houses, department and 10-cent stores will still get good stock at a low figure, while you are buying early and paying their price.

Now, Mr. Florist, are you ready to place your order at advanced figures, when there is time from now until November 1 for buying of Dutch bulbs?

Purple Globe. Stirling Castle and Comet are doing better than Livingston's Purple Globe. Our day temperature ranges from 70 to 75 degrees and the night temperature from 65 to 70 degrees. The plants were watered about twice a week and were given a little liquid fertilizer about once a week, consisting of liquid cow manure in a mild form. The house is well ventilated each day. We have fertilized the blooms by shaking the plants. Any information you may be able to give me will be appreciated. J. E. F.—O.

Comet and Stirling Castle are good winter tomatoes. Livingston's Purple Globe is better adapted for outdoor culture. I think the principal reasons why your plants are doing so poorly are, first, the night temperature is excessive; second, the plants are being overwatered; third, you are overfeeding them. In addition, they probably are growing in solid beds and have an almost unlimited root run. A suitable night temperature for tomatoes in winter is 60 to 62 degrees. They prefer a dry atmosphere; they should have a good drying out between waterings. In solid beds, with a big root run, fruit will not set satisfactorily during midwinter. If in benches with a limited root run, where rampant growth can be restricted, a good set can be assured, provided artificial pollination is practiced.

You should not have applied liquid manure at this season. The plants cannot need it. A little given when the crop was well set would have been of benefit, but earlier it would be more likely to be harmful. Remove all the laterals and shorten back the leaves, which help to keep the sunshine from the branches. Plants in solid beds are all right when the sun is higher in the heavens, but they are at best an uncertain crop in midwinter unless the roots can be restricted. C. W.

Houghton, Mich.—Alfred W. York, manager of the Lakeside Floral Co. for the last ten years, and Stephen Panasuk, foreman at the Lakeside greenhouses, have formed a partnership under the name of York & Panasuk. The new firm has purchased the stock of the Chassell, Mich., range and the fixtures and stock of the Lakeside Floral Co. stores at Calumet, Houghton and Laurium. The greenhouses and the store buildings have been leased.

The Market.

Another cold week and a week of good business has come to pass, though stock is still so scarce that wholesalers have had to turn down many local as well as shipping orders. It is the general opinion that there never has been so much cold weather. The glass has read lower on many previous occasions, but never for so long a period. All outdoor stock is at a standstill, and also even that under glass. Despite the large amount of oil burned, neither carnations nor roses open freely. Without some help from the north, roses would have been extremely scarce during the last ten days, and even with this northern supply wholesalers have not been able to fill orders.

The call for good stock for parties and decorations has been excellent, besides which there has been a large demand for funeral work, which has kept the cheaper stock under. Violets during the heavy rains were poor and scentless, but now are improving every day. Stock has been shipped as far as Minneapolis from this market, but, while the flowers arrived in good condition, their fragrance on arrival must have been poor. Bulbous stock comes in slowly and it will be another week or ten days before there are really good daffodils on the market. Stocks, cornflowers and marigolds are the best of the cheaper flowers. Easter lilies are coming in rapidly, both cut and in pots. Callas arrive slowly on account of the cold. Plumosus is extremely scarce and likely to be for some time yet. The usual quantity of brake and huckleberry is coming in, but maidenhair ferns are short in supply. Pot plants are more plentiful.

Various Notes.

Arthur Gleave, of Gleave's Flower Shop, Santa Barbara, was in town this week buying stock. He says that business has been remarkably good all through the season so far, while during the holidays it was a great rush. This shows what careful attention to details and a thorough knowledge of the business will do, for it should be remembered that Mr. Gleave has only been in business a little over a year.

C. C. Wooden, formerly connected with the trade here, has obtained the lease and fixtures of the Abbey Flower Shop, at Eighth and Figueroa streets, the late proprietors of which seem to have vanished.

Martin Reukauf, representing H. Bayersdorfer & Co., of Philadelphia, and F. W. Treadup, representing the A. L. Randall Co., of Chicago, are calling on the trade here this week.

Boyle & Darnaud, of San Diego, write that business is exceptionally good now and that they are adding another large new greenhouse.

Frank Lichtenberg reports business fine.

J. W. Wolters has had several large decorations of late that have used up large quantities of good stock. Big fronds of tree ferns, long sprays of heather and acacia were used in one decoration with good effect.

Bernard Tassano, of the Santa Cruz Evergreen Co., who has returned from a trip to the north, reports doing a fine business, even as far ahead as July. These young men, Bernard and N. Gondolfa, have worked up a nice business in a short time. They get on well together and their cheerfulness at all times helps to make them many friends.

The Broadway Florist reports good business, but like everyone else, says it is difficult to get enough stock. Jack d'Ortense is now with the firm.

Walter Garbett, recently connected with the California Cut Flower & Evergreen Co., is now with Tassano Bros.

W. Snyders, representing S. Murata & Co., has returned from a successful northern trip.

The California Cut Flower & Evergreen Co. is improving its store by the addition of a mezzanine floor.

Fred Sperry, manager of the L. A. Floral Co., continues to receive encouraging letters regarding the excellence of the stock shipped and the careful methods of packing.

S. Murata & Co. are getting settled in their new quarters and report shipping business as being in excess of the average for this season, despite the scarcity of stock.

The Market.

An active demand and only moderate supplies of most varieties of flowers leaves practically no surplus of any item from day to day. Sweet peas are increasing rather slowly in quantity, but the quality is good and the stock continues to be picked up as soon as it appears in the market. Carnations are a little better, but several of the growers are not bringing in any at present, which leaves the supply as a whole rather short and all offerings clean up at good prices.

The rose situation is influenced largely by the active shipping demand. Few of the Japanese growers are bringing in any roses and the large growers are shipping out a great deal of stock, which shortens up the local supply materially. Some of the local retailers report plenty of roses, but in most instances of this kind they have a private source of supply and are not affected by the general condition of the market. Violets have been scarce, but plenty are expected from now on. Little actual damage was done by the frost. Most of the violet farms, it has been ascertained, felt only the heaviest freezes. The cold has held back the blooms for so long that they are ready to come out in profusion. Some members of the trade are of the opinion, however, that a little rain is needed to bring out an abundance of flowers.

The demand still exceeds the supply of spring bulb stock, but this condition is not expected to prevail much longer, as several varieties will soon be in full crop. There is an excellent cut of freesias and this large crop comes in nicely at this time, in view of the real need for flowers. Growers are making a good profit. Forced pot tulips and hyacinths find a ready sale. The market is well supplied with orchids, there being sufficient offerings to fill all requirements. Prices remain the same. Valley is a little more plentiful. Supplies of acacia and manzanita blooms, fruit blossoms and pussy willow are increasing rapidly.

Various Notes.

The principal feature of an elaborate decoration arranged recently at the Native Sons' hall by Pelicano, Rossi & Co. was a gold horn of plenty which stood about eighteen feet high. The column was garlanded with violets and the horn was treated spirally with violets and purple ribbon. Out of the horn projected fifteen dozen American Beauty roses. About fifteen dozen bunches of fifty violets each were used. At the base of the column was a garden effect of cinerarias.

Ferrari Bros. are attaining considerable importance as commercial orchid growers. They decided to go into this line more strongly some time ago and now are bringing in a nice cut. They also have a fine cut of tulips.

It is understood that F. H. Forrest, until recently with MacRorie & McLaren, intends to engage in the decoration business on his own account.

The California Dahlia Growers' Association will hold a meeting at the Palace hotel February 6.

Albert O. Stein made a pall of sweet peas, the first of the season, for the funeral of Betty de Jong. He also made a pall of orchids and lily of the valley for a noted rabbi's funeral the same week. Mr. Stein reports numerous table decorations and an important wedding, so his force is winding up a busy January.

The general appearance of the store of the Francis Floral Co., at Powell and Sutter streets, has been greatly improved by the thorough renovation it has just received. Under the new arrangement excellent display facilities are provided for the company's own basket creations, which are its specialty. Francis Schlotzhauer, the proprietor, has just brought out a new line of novelties resembling in design and finish work that was done in Italy many years ago. No two of these baskets are alike, and after being used as ornamental containers for flowers, they make handsome fruit baskets, card trays, etc. Mr. Schlotzhauer says these novelties are popular with tourists.

Mrs. R. E. Darbee usually ships many violets for St. Valentine's day, but she is afraid stock will be scarce this year unless there should come a little rain and plenty of sunshine in the meanwhile. She has an order to supply the bouquets of violets to be distributed at the National Fruit Jobbers' convention at New Orleans by the California delegates. The practice of sending California flowers for distribution at conventions outside the state, she says, is rapidly gaining in favor and should be encouraged by the florists. Mrs. Darbee has just received a handsome silver cup awarded for the best collection of chrysanthemums at the convention of the International Soil Products Co., in El Paso, Tex., also a number of ribbons from that exhibition, as well as from the recent state fair held at Dallas, Tex. These she is displaying prominently at her retail store on Hyde street, in conjunction with the five medals and other awards she received from the P. P. I. E.

MacRorie & McLaren have been awarded the contract for decorating the Civic Center auditorium for the automobile show to be held February 10. In

The Market.

Business has been better than usual for the period following the holidays. The improvement consists in an increased daily demand, which so far has been steady. Excellent winter weather may account for part of the increase, but most of it comes from a general betterment in business conditions. Last week, for the graduating exercises in the public schools, large quantities of flowers were used by the girl graduates. Daffodils, roses, carnations and bulbous flowers were used as arm bouquets and corsages. Several classes expecting to use violets were disappointed, as the local supply was short and few could be obtained from California.

Midwinter prices on cut stock have been slightly stiffer than usual—carnations, 75 cents to $1; roses, $1.50 and up. Tulips, freesias, daffodils, Paper Whites and Romans are fairly plentiful, but often the supply does not meet the demand. Valley is seldom seen. Orchids are in sufficient supply. Roses are scarce. Carnations are cleaned up daily, with frequent shortages.

Tulips, cinerarias, daffodils, primroses, azaleas and cyclamens are the chief varieties of potted blooming plants.

Easter lilies, calla lilies and a few late Maud Dean mums are the only large flowers shown. There have been a great number of funerals, perhaps more than usual, and floral tokens have been used to a greater extent than they have been for several years.

Various Notes.

The Tonseth Floral Co. has arranged to keep permanently the premises it used for the holidays and the partition has been removed, doubling the space occupied previously. A better opportunity for display and more room for customers is gained by the change.

Martin & Forbes Co. is cutting a fine lot of orchids.

Rahn & Herbert Co. is cutting some calendulas, flowers not often seen on this market in midwinter.

Clarke Bros., A. F. Lalane, S. G. Lubliner, E. R. Chappell and Niklas & Son, proprietors of the five flower stores on Morrison street, all report business good. The five stores are all in the downtown district, between Fourth and Eleventh streets.

The nurserymen are busy lifting and shipping stock. J. B. Pilkington reports a satisfactory business so far this season. S. W. W.

SPOKANE, WASH.

The Market.

The rush of business which continued during the weeks following the holidays now is showing a tendency to relax a little. Business, however, is still good and about as much as can be easily and conveniently handled. Stock is not plentiful and the quality is just ordinary. Home-grown roses are practically out of the market, but good stock is being received from eastern sources. The shipped-in stock has good keeping qualities; in many cases it is in the carriers' hands from fifty to seventy-two hours. Carnations are of fair quality and in supply hardly equal to demand. Bulbous stock is fair but scarce, Golden Spurs, Paper Whites and freesias being about the only items offered. The delay in bulb shipments last year is responsible for the stock's late appearance.

Various Notes.

Bernson & Halle are cutting good sweet peas with stems from sixteen to twenty-four inches long. Stems over twenty inches are common with this firm. They are trying out Carnation Aviator this year and speak highly of it. They are propagating this variety heavily and intend to plant it extensively another year.

Donart & Stapleton report business good, so good that Mr. Donart is practically quitting the production of cucumbers and tomatoes at his vegetable range and is devoting the space to flowers, to supply the retail store trade. He is contemplating the erection of another range of houses just outside the city of Coeur d'Alene, Idaho.

A call at the store of the Spokane Florist Co. found the force busy. The windows were bright with genistas, jonquils and yellow tulips.

Superintendent of Parks John W. Duncan was the principal speaker at the annual banquet of the Spokane Robert Burns Society. Mr. Duncan, a Scotchman and a great admirer of the Scotch poet, was well qualified to perform the task asked of him.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

President, John Watson, Newark, N. Y.; Vice-president, Lloyd C. Stark, Louisiana, Mo.; Secretary and General Manager, Curtis Nye Smith, Boston, Mass.; Treasurer, Peter Youngers, Geneva, Neb.

At the annual meeting of the Massachusetts Nurserymen's Association, held in Boston, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, E. W. Breed, of Clinton; vice-president, John Kirkegaard, of Bedford; secretary-treasurer, W. H. Thurlow, of West Newbury. The executive committee consists of the above officers and G. The suit for trade-mark infringement and unfair competition brought by the Stark Bros. Nurseries & Orchards Co., of Louisiana, Mo., against the W. P. Stark Nurseries, of Stark City, Mo., which has been on the docket for months, now is before the Missouri Supreme court. William P. Stark was one of the original brothers, an officer and director of the plaintiff company before he established his present business at Stark City. Certain motions filed in the case have been overruled, and the case will be tried on its merits. The plaintiff therefore will proceed to give proofs upon the issues involved.

Toole's Hardy Plants for Cut Flowers

The following varieties are the most valuable for summer cut flowers. Why not grow some of them? The wholesale market uses immense quantities. You will find them valuable in your retail trade to furnish variety, and to fill in when other flowers are scarce.

In growing hardy plants you have no expense for coal, no depreciation and interest charges on expensive glass.

Your original investment is comparatively small and should be returned several fold the first season.

A few of Toole's hardy perennials for cut flowers will increase your net profits for the year, and it is net profits rather than gross sales that count.

Let us book your order now for early spring shipment as soon as our season opens here, from April 1 to 15. All fresh dug, healthy stock.

Strong one-year-old field grown plants or strong divisions.

at Kansas City the fourth week in January each year. E. J. B.

THE WESTERN ASSOCIATION.

Officers Elected.

At the twenty-seventh annual meeting of the Western Association of Nurserymen, held at Kansas City January 24 and 25, the following officers were elected:

President—E. M. Sherman, Charles City, Ia.

Vice-president—W. C. Reed, Vincennes, Ind.

Secretary and treasurer—Geo. W. Holsinger, Rosedale, Kan.

Executive committee—Geo. A. Marshall, Arlington, Neb.; Milton Moss, Huntsville, Ala.; H. W. Hobbs, Bridgeport, Ind.; E. H. Balco, Lansing, Kan.; Geo. H. Johnson, Kansas City, Mo.

Next meeting—Kansas City, January 23 and 24, 1918.

A Successful Meeting.

It was agreed that this was the most successful meeting the trade in the west has had. Forty-five nurseries were represented, with an attendance of sixty. Not only was the discussion of trade problems of much value to the individuals, but the business done in the purchase and sale of stock made a larger total than ever before.

Action on three matters of special importance was deferred to await the action of the national organization: Standardization of sales practices; coöperative hail insurance; recommendation of an increase in import duties on ornamental stock.

Trade Topics Discussed.

There was a long program of talks. Few of those named to lead discussions had written out what they had to say and most of the remarks were short and to the point. This is a summary:

"Would a National Retail Association as a Branch of the American Association Benefit the Trade?" by J. R. Mayhew. Ans.—Yes, and help the retailer as well, by making the business more safe in every way.

"How are We to Raise Our Prices, Wholesale and Retail, to Meet the Increased Cost of Production and of Doing Business?" by G. A. Marshall. Ans.—An increase in price is going to come, but it will be gradual and can not start before next fall, as many now have their catalogues out.

"How Can We Meet the Advanced Cost of Materials, Such as Boxes, Straps, Lumber, Paper, Twine, Burlap and Nails?" by Bert Lake. Ans.—The only way to get around this is by cooperative buying through the headquarters of the association.

"What Will be the Outcome of the Apple Tree Market this Spring?" by J. H. Skinner. Ans.—There will be a shortage in most varieties.

"What Was the Matter with the Cherry Tree Trade Last Fall?" by Harry Hobbs and W. C. Reed. Ans.—Some sold out while others had too many and the trouble was only in localities.

"What it Costs to Grow and Cellar a Three-year Apple Tree," by W. A. Harrison. Ans.—The cost varies, but at present not enough is asked for them; they are sold under price compared to younger trees and compared to the space taken up in the nursery.

"How to Eliminate Dead Beats," by M. E. Chandler. Ans.—Watch the list more closely and don't try to sell to everybody.

Do It Now!

Go over your Rose Houses carefully and estimate the plants you need for replanting this Spring, and place your order. Roses are going to be scarce. The Manetti situation is such that those who get it are fortunate, and the demand is far greater than the limited supply. We have sold over 100,000 grafted Roses in the last two weeks. We have 200,000 more to sell. There is considerable building contemplated. "Changing from Carnations to Roses" is a frequent explanation made when placing an order. If you are short at planting time it will be your fault and not ours. The growing of grafted Roses is an industry in itself. At Cromwell the large quantity of Roses grown for cut flowers makes it possible to get scions that are first-class. We want your Rose Plant order, and we want to be able to say "yes" to your inquiry. Estimate your requirements and write us.

NEW ROSES

GOLDEN GEM

DONALD MacDONALD

A new Hawlmark Red Rose sent out this year by Alex. Dickson and Sons. This rose has been tested for winter forcing for two years, and it produces more red roses during the winter than any rose now being grown. It is not a large rose, but has perfectly formed, medium sized flowers that sell at sight. Color bright orange carmine; will not turn blue because the base of the petals are orange.

It is not a summer rose, as it has the same substance as Killarney, and from Thanksgiving until May it is a money maker for the rose grower, as no pinching is necessary.

Strong Grafted Plants	$35.00 per 100	$300.00 per 1000
Own Root Plants	30.00 per 100	250.00 per 1000
Grafting Eyes		200.00 per 1000

GOLDEN GEM

Golden yellow seedling Rose. A most beautiful shade of deep golden yellow. A medium sized rose; long pointed bud well formed. A good keeper and very free bloomer, and a color that will sell.

Own Root plants only $30.00 per 100, $250.00 per 1000.

ROSE-PINK OPHELIA

A sport of Ophelia. Color clear Rose Pink. Limited quantity this season. Better order quickly if you want a supply.

Prices— Own Root
Per 100, $30.00; per 250, $70.00; per 1000, $250.00.
Grafted
Per 100, $35.00; per 250, $82.50; per 1000, $300.00.

PRIMEROSE

This beautiful forcing rose is of the general type of Ophelia. The young foliage is a lovely bronzy maroon, finishing bronzy green, and is of good habit and free growth.

The bud is long and pointed, ideal in form, and the color is Indian-yellow with apricot shadings, color at base of petals deep golden; has splendid stem. A fine novelty.

Own Root, $25.00 per 100, $200.00 per 1000.
Grafted, $30.00 per 100, $250.00 per 1000.

BROWN SCALE ON FERNS.

I enclose a Boston fern frond covered with brown scales, and as I have had little experience in the culture of ferns, I would like to have your advice as to the cause of this condition.
B. & B.—Wis.

The fern frond in question was badly infested with the common brown fern scale insect. For this particular insect a solution of tobacco extract, consisting of one part, by measure, of the tobacco extract to fifty parts of water, will prove a good exterminator, provided the solution is used faithfully for several applications. If the plants are in pots, it is an easy matter to dip them at intervals of ten days; and if they are planted out on a bench, a weekly application of the solution by means of a spray pump will answer the purpose.
W. H. T.

PTERIS FRONDS BURN.

Please inform me through The Review what is responsible for the poor condition of the enclosed pteris plants. The fronds seem to burn at the tips.
W. F. J.—Ia.

The condition of the pteris fronds would indicate that the plants were overwatered after they were repotted. Pteris plants of this type will stand much water after they are well rooted, but they are frequently finicky when heavily watered after a late potting. A little more care in watering, no extra fertilizers and a night temperature of 60 degrees will do much to overcome this trouble. W. H. T.

New Red Rose DONALD MacDONALD

A New HAWLMARK Red Rose sent out this year by Alex. Dickson & Sons

We have tested this rose for winter forcing for two years, and with us it produces more red roses during the winter than any rose we have ever grown. It is not a large rose, but has perfectly formed, medium-sized flowers that sell at sight. Color bright orange-carmine; will not turn blue, because the base of the petals is orange. It is not a summer rose, as it has the same substance as Killarney. We build the plants up until November, and from Thanksgiving until May it is a money-maker for the Rose Grower, as no pinching is necessary.

Superb is a seedling of Gloriosa and Enchantress. It has the good stem of Gloriosa and the fine growing habit of Enchantress. The color is a flesh pink and it keeps its color at all seasons. The flowers average about three inches, are very full and generally receive full score on substance. The flowers are all perfect and do not split. In the four years we have grown it, it has proved the best commercial variety, barring none.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

Business is good. The supply of stock, however, is rather short, and practically everything cleans up readily. Choice American Beauties are in good supply, but they do not have a lively market. Other roses are scarce and sell on sight. Carnations are in fair supply and sell easily. Easter lilies are cleaning up from day to day. Sweet peas are in abundance and sell satisfactorily. Valley, orchids and single violets are offered. Bulbous stock, including narcissi, daffodils, tulips and freesias, sells readily. Rubrum lilies, callas, snapdragons and forget-me-nots wind up the miscellaneous list. Greens are plentiful.

Various Notes.

Cincinnatians attending the carnation convention at Indianapolis this week are C. E. Critchell, Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Peterson, R. Witterstaetter, W. Ray Murphy, Otto Herschfeld, Frank Schneider, Henry Sheppard, Fred Bachmeier and P. J. Olinger.

COLUMBUS, O.

The Market.

Business has been extremely heavy during the last two weeks. Much stock has come in, but not enough in some lines to meet the demand. Roses are badly off crop and those that come in are sold quickly. Prices are high for these, considering the time of year. Ophelia seems to be more plentiful than the other varieties and its quality is fine. Russell sells in a hurry. Killarney and White Killarney roses move well by reason of the scarcity of other varieties. Carnations arrive in good quantities, but they are cleaned up early and some growers are called on two and three times daily. Some of the stock is cut rather closely, but all blooms go in the rush.

Narcissi are more plentiful than any other flowers and quantities of them are disposed of. They fill in nicely. Romans are not plentiful as yet and are in great demand. Sweet peas now are extra fine and a great number of them are disposed of at good prices. A few jonquils are to be seen, but not enough to cut any figure. Freesias are more plentiful and sell well. Valley is scarce and the demand is heavy.

Ferns have been scarce during the last ten days. Lilies are not plentiful and the demand for them is strong. Violets are moving nicely and the quality is all that could be desired. The demand for potted plants is strong. These include azaleas, primulas, begonias, cyclamens, ferns, palms, etc.

Various Notes.

The Indianola Florists report that business is rushing and that it is hard to get enough stock.

E. Metzmaier says he can hardly find enough stock to go around.

The Livingston Seed Co. has a fine line of cyclamens. These plants have had a good sale.

The Columbus Floral Co. says that stock never has been so scarce as at the present time.

The Munk Floral Co. is marketing a good cut of roses, in addition to a line of potted plants.

The Fifth Avenue Floral Co. has been hard pushed in getting settled in its new store.

Walter Marion, of Marion Bros., Circleville, was a visitor last week. He says the firm is cutting the finest sweet peas ever and that Marion brand carnations are of top-notch quality at present. J. M.

The Market.

No complaints are being made as to business, but all kinds of grumblings and mumblings about the shortage of stock are being heard. Much sickness in the city has accelerated the demand for carnations, roses, sweet peas and freesias, while many funerals also have drawn heavily on the supply of roses and carnations, making a severe shortage in these two flowers. The prices have not increased greatly; roses make $3 to $15 and carnations $3 to $4 per hundred, but there are not nearly enough of them to meet the demand.

The supply of sweet peas is limited, but the prospects are bright for a big crop.

More bulbous stock is available. Paper Whites are numerous, tulips are making a better appearance and freesias are almost plentiful at $1.50 to $4 per hundred. Easter lilies are still rare, but callas have increased in numbers considerably.

Good potted stock is abundant and in good demand. Cyclamens, begonias and primroses are especially attractive and in good favor. Smilax, plumosus and Sprengeri are plentiful and of good quality, but fern leaves, although abundant, are of only fair quality.

Various Notes.

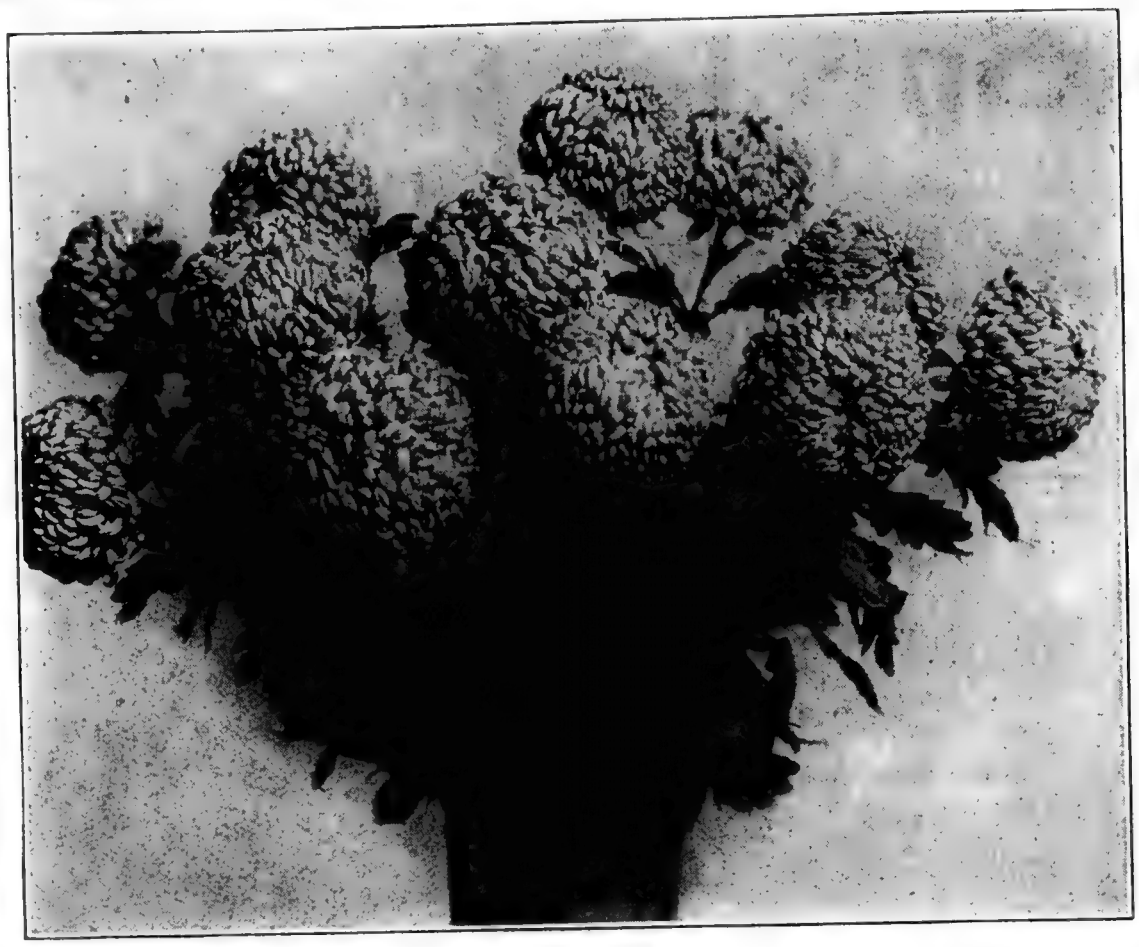
F. Stoelte, formerly with the A. Wiegand's Sons Co., now is in the employ of the Indianapolis Flower & Plant Co.

The Smith & Young Co. has stocked a complete line of wire designs from the Young Tool Co., of Casey, Ill.

Baur & Steinkamp are booked up until February 15 on their new carnation, Merry Christmas.

Henry W. Rieman reports excellent business, especially in funeral work. The sales have been so active that it has been necessary to cut stock green to fill orders.

A visit to the Indianapolis Flower & Plant Co. range is of special interest. The roses are in fine shape and in good crop. An exceedingly heavy crop of carnations is coming on. The pot plants are especially attractive, ferns, primroses, cyclamens, begonias and cinerarias being in fine condition. One of the most important items in the houses was the full line of promising looking bedding stock. E. E. T.



Springfield, Ill.—Hembreiker & Cole have ordered material for another house, of the John C. Moninger Co., Chicago. It is to be 35x150.

Reinbeck, Ia.—A greenhouse has been erected here by H. J. Watson, who is going after the Reinbeck people hard to make his first season's business a big one. Mr. Watson believes that a good start is a good omen.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.

The Market.

The dark, cold weather prevailing has influenced the market. Prices are high and the indications are they will remain so for some time. Bulbous stock is to be had, but it is not of good quality. Tulips are short, narcissi are small and violets are still scarce. Sweet peas are of better quality than they have been, but are not in great demand.

Various Notes.

William H. Davenport declares business is about normal. His cut flower trade now far exceeds his pot plant business.

S. E. Shaw is cutting some good spikes of Snapdragon Keystone. He will soon be offering narcissi in quantity.

James Garthley has been cutting fine blooms of Carnation Philadelphia. Mr. Garthley is the only grower in this vicinity who has been successful with this variety.

Edward M. Pierce states that he has no complaint to make as to the amount of business done. Carnations with him are a little off crop, but they were flowering heavily until the dark weather set in.

R. H. Woodhouse has had considerably funeral work lately. Mr. Woodhouse has some fine Easter lilies that promise a splendid crop for Easter. He is growing the variety known as Formosa.

W. M. P.

NORFOLK, VA.

January 24 J. W. Grandy, Jr., of Grandy the Florist, gave a banquet to his employees. Covers were laid for sixteen.

Mr. Grandy took this occasion to express to his employees his appreciation of their services, services that have in a measure been responsible for the steady growth of the business. In a few brief remarks he emphasized the importance of a continuance of that courteous, fair treatment of customers which has always been the policy of the concern. Much stress was laid on service and coöperation.

Mr. Grandy announced that the business in the future would be put on a coöperative profit-sharing plan, and that each and every employee would share in the profits of the business. The dinner will be made an annual affair.

Greenhouse Heating.

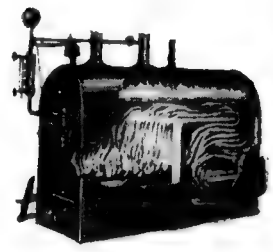
SUBSCRIBERS are invited to write the Editor of this Department with regard to any details of greenhouse heating that are not understood. But please do not ask The Review to make a choice of apparatus for you. The greenhouse heating equipment advertised in this paper is, we believe, the best for the trade to buy, and each article the best in the special field of its adaptation.

BETTER USE LARGER RETURNS.

I intend to build a sash house 10x70, running east and west, with the boiler room at the east end. The side walls will be fifty inches high. There will be no glass in the north wall, but there will be twenty inches of glass in the south wall. The walls will be constructed of sheathing and roofing paper, with shingles on the outside. Would two 2-inch flow pipes be satisfactory, with four 1½-inch pipes at the south side and five 1¼-inch pipes at the north side, as returns under the benches? The expansion tank will be connected to the highest point of the system.

C. L. F.—Ill.

Since the letter from C. L. F. does not state the temperature he desires to maintain in the house, we are not able to determine whether or not the installation of the heating system described will give the desired results. Theoretically, the amount of radiation suggested is amply large for 60 degrees when the outside temperature is 10 degrees below zero. In actual practice, however, we do not advise the use of 1¼-inch pipe for returns in houses more than forty or fifty feet in length, and then only when they are three or four feet above the top of the boiler, or when they are used in a closed system. For 60 degrees we would substitute four 1½-inch returns for the five 1¼-inch pipes suggested. Or, better yet, use six 2-inch returns in the house.



In case the house is much exposed to high winds, or if the walls and roof are not tight, we would use two 2½-inch flow pipes and six 2-inch returns, for 60 degrees. Provided 50 to 55 degrees will suffice, one 2-inch flow and two 2-inch returns might be used on the wall where there is no glass. If the flow pipes are run downhill and the highest point of each flow pipe is connected with the expansion tank, there will be no occasion for using air valves.

A HOUSE ON SLOPING GROUND.

I have erected a greenhouse and shall soon be ready to install the heating pipes. I shall heat with hot water. The house is 13x60 and nine feet high to the ridge. There are three feet of glass in the south wall for a distance of thirty-six feet in the length of the house; the remainder is boarded. The north side is well protected by buildings. The boiler shed is at the west end and there is a

The World's Supreme Greenhouse Boiler Record

The past year has developed unheard of commercial records for the business interests of this country.

U. S. exports have reached the enormous sum of $4,000,000,000.

The bank clearings of our country were $260,102,653,054.

The tonnage in steel assumed the astounding figures of 40,000,000 (forty million) tons.

The year's earnings in freight and transportation of the railroads ran into billions.

HORTICULTURALLY speaking, 1916 also made remarkable history.

Cut Flowers and Greenhouse Products, $70,000,000 to $72,000,000.

(According to the best available figures.)

These figures we hope will leave a generous and well deserved profit for our numerous florist friends.

Our company takes pride in announcing that the year just closed goes on record as the world's highest mark in the sales of greenhouse boilers. During the year of 1916 we sold direct from factory to user the following boilers for greenhouse heating:

Kroeschell Greenhouse Hot Water Boilers	1,639,500 sq. ft. glass
Kroeschell Tubeless Hot Water Boilers	104,850 sq. ft. glass
Kroeschell Tubeless Steam Boilers	65,400 sq. ft. glass
Kroeschell Water Tube Steam Boilers	203,200 sq. ft. glass
Kroeschell High Pressure Steam Boilers	1,300,336 sq. ft. glass
TOTAL	3,313,286 sq. ft. glass

In making the above statement we are very thankful that every boiler referred to was sold by us to be used for the peaceful, inspiring and beautiful industry of producing flowers—God's greatest gift.

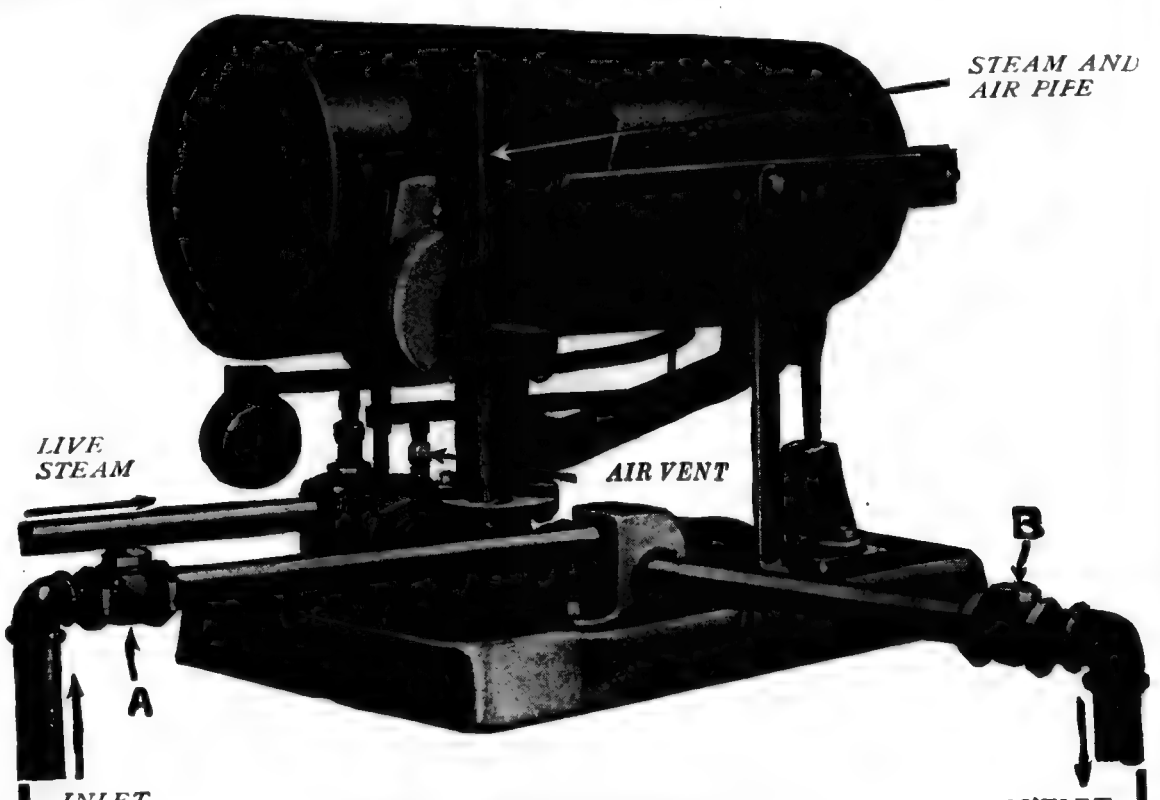
gradual upward slope of the ground, amounting to a little over three feet, from the west to the east end. So I have set the boiler on the surface of the ground at the west end. Is not that the same as putting the boiler down three feet where the ground is level? Do you think two 2½-inch flow pipes overhead, with six 2-inch returns, would be sufficient to hold a temperature of 55 degrees here, in southwest Missouri?

O. C. M.—Mo.

There should be no difficulty in heating the house described to 55 degrees with two 2½-inch flow pipes and six 2-inch returns, so far as the amount of radiation is concerned.

The three feet of rise in the pipes is only equal to one and one-half feet so far as its effect upon the circulation is concerned, since it is the average height of the pipes that must be taken into account. We would prefer to carry the flow pipes upon the plates and the returns either on the walls or under the benches, but in order to secure a satisfactory circulation with uphill flows it may be necessary to run them about two feet below the ridge. The returns should be carried as high as possible, but even then it would be better to drop the boiler so that its top would not be more than two feet above the floor of the greenhouse.

WHEN BOILER IS EXTRA LARGE.



We have built a greenhouse 12x56 and are putting in a Furman 6-section hot water boiler, rated at 1,650. The radiation for this house figures about 300 feet. We bought the extra large boiler so we could build a larger house later. We are putting the boiler in a cellar eight feet deep; this will allow the returns to be about two feet above the top of the boiler. We have run a 2-inch flow pipe through the center of the house and connected it with nine 1¼-inch returns, four under one side bench and five under the other side bench. Later in the season we expect to put two 1¼-inch returns in a hotbed at the south side of the greenhouse. These returns will be about one foot lower than the returns in the greenhouse.

We are told that our boiler is so large that the water will not flow, but will foam and go out at the expansion tank outlet. If that is correct, should we reduce the radiation of the boiler by running only a few sections of it? Should the highest point of the flow pipe be over the boiler or at the farther end of the house? We could have it at either place. We understand that the expansion tank should be above the highest point of the flow pipe. If so, should it be attached to the flow pipe or to a main return at the boiler? We find so many differences of opinion on where the tank should be attached, and on the size of tank for this size of boiler, that we are at a loss to know what to do, as we have always used steam heretofore.

C. P. H. & S.—Pa.

From the data given we cannot determine what temperature is desired, but if the amount of radiation has been figured correctly we would say that a temperature of 55 degrees could be readily secured with 300 square feet of radiation in a house 12x56 feet, provided there is no glass in the side walls.

is greater than is needed, it is important that the heating pipes be of good size and thus assist in obtaining a rapid circulation. When a large number of small pipes are used as returns, the water often circulates only in the upper pipes in the coils, or in those in which the circulation is favored. This may reduce the circulation one-half or more and will greatly increase the tendency of the water to "boil over."

Provided there is no glass in the walls, and a temperature of 55 degrees is desired, we would use not less than one 2½-inch flow under the ridge and eight 1½-inch returns under the benches, and the tendency toward boiling over will be lessened if one 2½-inch flow pipe is run upon each plate and connected with three 2-inch returns under each side bench. Even though only one 2½-inch flow is used, we would prefer to use seven 2-inch returns rather than eight 1½-inch. Except for the danger of boiling over, two 2-inch flows might be used in the house instead of two 2½-inch, as suggested above.

For 300 square feet of radiation, not more than 400 square inches of grate surface are needed. In cast the boiler has a rocking grate, we would suggest disconnecting two of the sections, one on each side, by taking out the bolts which fasten them to the rocking bars. Fire brick may be used to cover these grate sections and lessen the size of the firebox. Unless the size of the grate is reduced, little will be gained by taking off one or more of the sections. If careful attention is given to the firing we would not consider it necessary.

The flow pipes should run downhill, with the highest point over the boiler, and from such highest point a ¾-inch pipe should run to a 1-inch pipe leading to a 20-gallon expansion tank. (A 10-gallon tank will answer for 300 square

PLANT TUBS

EVERLASTING VIRGINIA WHITE CEDAR

EVERYBODY agrees that Plant Tubs made of everlasting Virginia White Cedar will best resist rot or decay. The "Keystone" brand of White Cedar Plant Tubs are made of this celebrated wood, and these goods are painted inside and out with best oil paints, a rich green.

They are bound with heavy steel hoops for the large size, and electric-welded wire hoops (galvanized) on the small size. The large sizes are trimmed with handsome drop handles and metal feet, and have perforated, removable bottoms.

These Cedar Tubs are made in all sizes, from 24¾ inches top diameter down to 6 inches, amply large for a Bay Tree and small enough for a Hyacinth. Every one guaranteed. Booklet in colors, with prices, furnished upon request.

feet of radiation.) The tank should be placed as high as possible and, if there is no danger of freezing, a vent pipe should be carried several feet higher, with an overflow pipe leading out from the side near the top. When the expansion tank is connected with the main return, in case the water boils there is a back pressure on the return, which tends to check the circulation and still further increase the difficulty. This is particularly likely to occur when the boiler is too large for the radiation.

For the hotbed we would prefer to use two 2-inch returns. These may be connected with the 2½-inch flow pipe on the plate nearest the hotbed. Provided a temperature more or less than 55 degrees is desired, it is merely necessary to increase or lessen the number of the returns, one return making a difference of about 5 degrees.

CROMWELL, CONN.

A. N. Pierson, Inc., is cutting fine freesias in quantity, which find a ready sale. Of the 500,000 planted this season, approximately one-fifth have been cut. About 75,000 rose plants are already out of the grafting frames and grafting is now proceeding at the rate of 10,000 plants per day; 7,000 own-root cuttings are placed in the sand daily. Among the new carnations Belle Washburn is doing splendidly. There is not a split flower to be found of the variety, and as large a stock as possible is being worked up. For the benefit of the unmarried employees, especially those from out of town, A. N. Pierson, Inc., is building a boarding house to accommodate about thirty-five men. It will be equipped with all modern conveniences. At the present cost of living few families are willing to take boarders.

Robert Karlstrom is still laid up with neuralgia. He has been under the doctor's care ever since his return from a western trip December 15.

Victor Streckfus, son of Hugo Streckfus, of Syracuse, N. Y., after seven months of training on the Mexican border, has returned to the florists' business. He now is getting practical experience in rose growing at the Cromwell Gardens. R. C. S.

DETROIT, MICH.

Last week stock was hard to obtain, except carnations and, perhaps, violets. American Beauties are few and the price touches $9 for the specials. Choice peas arrive each day and all roses clear at fancy prices.

Hugo Schroeter's window representative of the auto show was a clever affair.

Philip Breitmeyer has left for Cuba, where he expects to vacation a few weeks.

Fred Breitmeyer, of Mount Clemens, reports that his Rose-pink Ophelia is selling well.

Among visitors last week were W. J. Vesey, Jr., of Fort Wayne, Ind.; Mr. Manda, of East Orange, N. J., who is spending a few weeks here; Joseph Marks, of the American Bulb Co., Chicago.

Miss Della Lanier has left the employ of the Central Floral Co. H. T.

The Market.

The demand last week, although holding up well, was not so good as that of the week previous. The supply of cut stock is still short, as the weather has continued dark and cold. There is just enough stock to meet the demand, and most of the florists clean up their supply each night. Roses are none too plentiful, Russells and American Beauties being almost at a premium. The Killarneys are off color on account of the dark weather. Ward roses are in better supply, but Ophelia and Sunburst are short. White roses are extremely scarce. The supply of carnations is smaller than it was a week ago. Spencer sweet peas are arriving in large quantities and are selling well. Jonquils appeared in the market last week for the first time this season. Forget-me-nots have also arrived. There is a good supply of Easter lilies and a few callas. Valley continues high-priced. Some splendid single violets are offered. Stevia is on the short side and the supply of narcissi is beginning to diminish. Tulips are in fine demand. The call for funeral work during the week was large. Blooming plants are in fine demand, especially yellow narcissi, cyclamens, tulips, azaleas and rhododendrons.

Preparations are well under way for St. Valentine's day business. Indications point to a good supply of violets for this day.

Various Notes.

A visitor last week was S. L. Nelson, of the Burlington Willow Ware Shops, of Burlington, Ia.

Miss Margaret Flick, of the Flick Floral Co., is spending a week at Detroit, where she is combining business with pleasure. The Flick Floral Co. had a busy week of funeral work. The men are cutting some fine Spencer sweet peas, and are showing the first jonquils and forget-me-nots of the season.

Miss Margaret Vesey returned last week from Muncie, Ind., where she had been visiting her sister.

The Doswell Floral Co. had a good business last week, with just enough cut flowers to meet the demand. The company is cutting good Shawyer, Ophelia and Killarney roses. The single violets are excellent.

Edgar Wenninghoff had some attractive baskets of sweet peas and Shawyer roses in his window decoration last week.

F. J. Knecht did a heavy shipping business last week, his Russell roses being in good demand.

A heavy run of funeral work last week was reported by A. J. Lanternier & Co. They have a fine line of blooming plants this season.

The next meeting of the Florists' Club will be held with Frank J. Knecht, Fairfield avenue and Rudisell boulevard, February 6. This will be an important meeting, as the constitution of the club will be voted on, and every member is urged to be present. R. F.

Business during January was unusually good. Stock of late has been a little short at times, particularly lilies and roses. Callas are almost unobtainable, but Easter lilies are now less scarce and of good quality. Carnations arrive in sufficient quantities to supply the demand. Bulbous stock is coming in slowly. Yellow narcissi and a few tulips are about all to be had, but another week may see quite an increase.

Some good freesias are now offered. Violets are plentiful and command a good price. Sweet peas are slow in arriving and the demand is becoming heavier. Good smilax is hard to find, but other greens are good. Cyclamens and azaleas certainly are having their innings now. Primroses are plentiful in all varieties.

Various Notes.

Eli Cross has had some fine azalea plants on display in his store window.

Miss Mary Hartnett reports business good. She expects to move to her new location soon.

Arthur Crabb has been busy with numerous funeral orders.

The Wealthy Avenue Floral Co. has some cyclamen plants that are bound to please the buyer. A. F. C.

PITTSBURGH.

The Market.

Conditions have not changed much in the last week. Stock of all kinds is plentiful, except roses, which have not shown much increase in quantity. The demand for them far exceeds the supply every day. The retail stores all seem to have been quite busy, except on Saturday, when there was some complaint, as the big fire in the downtown district seemed to cause a certain amount of excitement and the usual counter trade fell off as a result.

Various Notes.

The Karl Koenig estate is sending to the Pittsburgh Cut Flower Co. some excellent lilies, narcissi and tulips.

Murray McGrew, of G. P. Weaklen & Co., seems to be exceedingly happy; at any rate he is whistling a good deal. It is a girl.

The attendants at the carnation convention from this vicinity include T. Malbranc, of Johnstown; Ed Blind, William Loew, Fred Burki and W. A. Clarke, of Pittsburgh.

Hayes Carney, aged 12 years, died January 24, after a month's illness. He was the son of Walter H. Carney, who was associated with J. B. Murdoch & Co. for some years. Mr. Carney has the sympathy of his many friends in the trade.

TESTIMONIALS

Bradford, Pa., Jan. 18, 1917.
Mr. Benjamin Hammond, Beacon, N. Y.
Dear Sir:—I received some Beauty Rose Plants that were infested with a fly similar to the house fly; it pierces the bud and lays eggs from which maggots are hatched. Thrip Juice No. 2 kills the vermin, and "Beauty" growers should all know of this remedy.
Very truly yours, C. E. GUNTON.

Dear Sirs:—Thrip Juice No. 2 is the most effective insecticide I have ever used. Our Chrysanthemums were the finest grown in our city, and I credit Hammond's Thrip Juice for much of the vigorous growth of plants and quantity of bloom. Believe me, it is putting color into our Carnations at this time. We spray constantly through a brass ball attached to the hose and never had finer stock. Very truly yours.

Fort Wayne, Ind., Jan. 25, 1917.
Mr. Benjamin Hammond, Beacon, N. Y.
Dear Sir:—Last summer we found Hammond's No. 2 Thrip Juice very effective in keeping down the leaf roller on Roses and Chrysanthemums. By spraying heavily once a week it catches the young as they hatch out and before they become millers. In previous seasons we have been kept busy catching the miller by hand, but last year we were saved the trouble and annoyance. Send ten gallons more, right along.
Very truly yours, AARON SHIVES,

Lawn Hose Made for Rough Usage

We know all about the trouble florists have with the ordinary kind of lawn hose.

We know that nothing but the very best grade of hose will give satisfactory service against the hard usage it must withstand around the greenhouse.

Therefore when we say that Goodyear Wingfoot Lawn Hose is made to meet the most trying conditions, we have in mind especially the use of this hose around the greenhouse.

You can drag Goodyear Wingfoot Lawn Hose over cinder and concrete walks and around sharp bench legs. You can leave it lying in the sun and where wheelbarrows run over it. We do not expect you to always put it away and dry it out.

We have all these things in mind when we tell you that Goodyear Wingfoot Lawn Hose is the most serviceable, all-around good hose that the florist can possibly buy.

Goodyear Wingfoot Lawn Hose is made in such a way that it cannot kink and it is guaranteed not to burst at any time within two whole lawn hose seasons.

The Market.

Business in general has shown some improvement during the last week. The demand for all classes of stock has been good and the available supply has been cleaned up at satisfactory prices. Carnations are in good supply, but the demand is sufficiently large so that there is no surplus on anything but reds. These seem to be in abundance and the call is not sufficiently strong to use up the cut. Prices, however, show no decline and are holding firm at from $3 to $4 per hundred.

Roses are scarce. There is a medium cut of the different varieties, but the demand seems to be extra heavy and the shorter grades are cleaned up each morning. Russell, Hoosier Beauty and Ophelia are particularly scarce and it is impossible to get these varieties in any quantity. The supply of double violets seems to be about equal to the demand. Singles are hard to obtain and few orders are being filled on this item. The quality of the doubles is good and fair prices are being realized. Sweet peas are coming in more heavily at this time, but the supply is as yet far short of the demand. Cattleyas are in medium supply, but the demand is light just now. Consequently there are plenty to go around. Spring stock, such as tulips, narcissi, daffodils, etc., are coming in more heavily, but the cut is moving readily. Easter lilies are scarce at this time, due to the shortage of supply rather than to an excessive demand. Plants are moving nicely and there is quite a call for hyacinths.

Taken all in all, the condition of the market is a healthy one, although more stock could be disposed of if it were to be had. The shortage of coal, together with the extremely cold weather, has placed a burden on the growers, and this is an item that will go far toward increasing the cost of production this year.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

The Market.

Business in general seems to have been good, although rather erratic by reason of much funeral work one day and practically nothing the next. The market has been adequately supplied with cut flowers. The roses, Richmond, Killarney and Russell, ranged in price from $6 to $8. Violets were quoted at $1 per hundred, with tulips and narcissi making $4. Valley is difficult to procure and the price is stiff; the same applies to orchids. Easter lilies have been in robust demand and the good prices have pleased the growers of this stock. Flowering plants continue to sell readily, primroses and begonias probably leading in popularity. Good Boston ferns clear easily.

Various Notes.

The W. H. Lill Co., which now occupies the store formerly conducted by the R. M. Chapman Co., is doing a splendid business in its attractive flower department, over which Miss Hayden presides.

The Minneapolis Market Gardeners' Association held its annual midwinter picnic January 20. This was the seventeenth winter picnic held by the Minneapolis gardeners, who find the summer months too busy for such an event. About 400 gardeners and friends took part in the celebration, a feature of which was a basket supply, served picnic style, each member or family bringing the food to the auditorium in a basket. A lengthy vaudeville program in the afternoon was followed at night by dancing and games. The officers of the association are: President, Nelson H. Reeves; secretary, E. O. Ballard; treasurer, F. M. Lehrby. W. M. Bofferding, as head of the reception committee, had a busy time of it to make everybody meet everybody else.

The Whitted Floral Co. forces have been hard pushed by a large quantity of funeral work.

The Minnesota Garden Flower Society will hold an interesting meeting February 9 at the Public Library.

Messrs. Stein and Keeley, of Holm & Olson, St. Paul, recently visited friends at the Whitted Floral Co. stores. They were dressed up in their gayest attire and came over with 8,000 others similarly "dolled up," to boost the carnival being held at St. Paul this week.

FOLEY PIPE FRAME GREENHOUSES

require no nails for attaching roof bars to ridge and gutter sills.
Galvanized ties and galvanized screws are used entirely.

An Exclusive Foley Feature

Greatly adds to Strength of House

A Our patented malleable iron bar bracket hooks over top of flange on channel gutter and is then driven firmly in place with a hammer. No bolts or drilling of gutters necessary. Screw hole in roof bar is bored at factory. End of roof bar is exposed, allowing free circulation of air; end of bar can be easily painted, thereby preventing decay.

B Method of attaching roof bars to ridge. Galvanized ridge and bar tie below is screwed to under sides of ridge and roof bars. On top of roof a screw is driven through tongue of bar into ridge.

C Galvanized sill and bar tie where wooden gutters are used. Also long screw through tongue of roof bar, securely fastens bar to concentric sill.

D Bars cut concentric principle, permitting condensation from drip grooves in bars to fall free of sill into drip conductor, thereby preventing decay so commonly found where the old style bevel sill and bevel cut bars are used.

The boring of the roof bars at the factory and furnishing galvanized ridge and sill ties with galvanized screws eliminates the poor job and extra work which "toe-nailing" invariably means. Actual tests have proven that this improved construction of ours is considerably stronger than the old way.

This is not an experiment. It is just one of the many features which make the "Foley House" superior to any other type.

GLEN COVE, N. Y.

The eleventh annual dinner of the Nassau County Horticultural Society was held in the Oriental hotel, Glen Cove, January 23. Nearly 100 members and friends sat down to a sumptuous repast, which made one forget the high cost of living for a while. The tables were decorated with cut flowers and pot plants. After everyone had taken good care of the inner man and nearly everyone present was enjoying his Robert Burns, President James McCarthy, with a few well chosen words, presented to James MacDonald a small present, as a token of appreciation of his services as president during the last year. William Stewart, of Boston, Mass., was then introduced as toastmaster for the evening. Toasts were responded to as follows: For the Nassau County Horticultural Society, John F. Johnson; New York Florists' Club, A. Guttman; the seed trade, William Sperling; the nursery trade, W. E. Maynard. A telegram of good wishes from M. C. Ebel, of Madison, N. J., was read and best wishes also were received from the Massachusetts Horticultural Society and the Horticultural Society of Boston. Many of the important nursery and seed houses in the country were represented by members or by salesmen. Among those who helped to relieve the monotony of speech-making by singing were: Messrs. Ferguson, Twigg, Wilson, Jones, Collins and French.

At the conclusion of the most successful dinner in the society's history everybody crossed hands and sang "Should auld acquaintance be forgot?"

BELOW IS A LETTER RECEIVED FROM MR. LOHR, AFTER A TERRIFIC STORM IN HIS VICINITY:

THE ICKES-BRAUN MILL CO., Chicago, Ill.

Dear Sirs:—We had a very severe storm here today, and the writer was in the greenhouses and took particular notice of the effect it had on the buildings. There was not the slightest shake or tremble in any part of the building. The same storm blew down telephone wires, poles, barns, and did a lot of damage. We are also pleased to tell you that we have the finest show for carnations we have ever had. We are more than pleased with the houses. Yours truly, W. S. LOHR, Ottawa, Ill.

This letter from one of our customers simply proves the good features of our construction. ICKES-BRAUN construction features are Strength—Permanency—Reliability. We build efficient houses. Write for our sketches and estimates. Order what you need either for repairs or new houses.

BUFFALO.

The Market.

Although January business was a little slow, the month's totals would show that it was fairly good for a first month of the year. Stock, however, has been scarce from the beginning, and there is no relief in sight. There has been a good demand for roses, but roses have been scarce. Carnations are a little more plentiful, due to the fact that we have had some sunshine lately. Spring flowers are arriving in larger quantities every day, especially jonquils, which realize good sales. Tulips, freesias, snapdragons, mignonette, hyacinths and sweet peas add to the assortment and are essential to basket combinations and table decorations. Orchids, violets, gardenias and valley are plentiful and have a good demand. The present supply of greens is sufficient for all demands.

Various Notes.

If no misfortune befalls the azalea plants of Frank Baum, he will have a fine batch for Easter sales.

Among the unusual things at the store of W. J. Palmer & Son last week was a floral replica of a locomotive. The "engine" was about two and one-half feet in height and about four feet in length. It was made principally of white carnations. The base consisted of pink roses and white carnations.

The noted evangelist, "Billy" Sunday, arrived in Buffalo January 27. He opened his campaign Sunday, January 28, and will remain here eight weeks. The florists' business to a certain extent will be benefited by the augmented demand for flowers on the part of the crowds that flock to the evangelist's meetings.

Prof. D. Lumsden, of Cornell University, February 8 will give the second of his series of lectures on "Gardens and Garden Flowers," at the Perkins Memorial hall. A. E.

Saves Labor in Handling Small Aster Plants

Following is an extract from a letter received from J. G. Botkin, of Urbana, Ohio:

"One of our great savings in labor with Skinner Irrigation has been in handling the small aster plants. This plant is very susceptible to heat and drought. Formerly we potted off all the small plants in 2-inch stand of plants when planting out, even in hot weather. Now we take good seedling plants and by using the irrigation right after the planting, we can get a much better stand at greatly reduced cost."

For COMMERCIAL GREENHOUSES

This Metropolitan semi-iron commercial greenhouse, 18 x 200 feet, was erected for the Springfield Floral Co., of Springfield, N. J.

Note the neat general appearance of this greenhouse, particularly of the walls. This is made possible by the Metropolitan patented cast iron eave, which, besides being ice-clearing, also has a combination drip conductor feature which carries off all waters of condensation from the inside of the roof. Notice, too, that no wood headers are necessary with this eave.

SAN FRANCISCO NOTES.

recently on his way home from the Orient.

Mr. Rowe, well known landscape gardener of Santa Barbara, Cal., was a recent visitor.

S. Murata & Co., of Los Angeles, have sent in large inquiries for roses to the San Francisco market.

Domoto Bros. have a nice cut of Formosa lilies and report a strong demand; also plenty of business in pot stock, cyclamens, cinerarias, azaleas, etc.

C. Kooyman has changed the arrangement of his new store, so that his stock shows to much better advantage. The window extends back several feet on one side of the store and he has made provision to show flowers on that side and supplies on the other.

Senator Rigdon, of San Luis Obispo, has introduced a bill in the legislature, which seeks to establish the office of seed commissioner under the jurisdiction of the State Horticultural Commissioner at a salary of $2,400 a year. It would be the duty of the new officer to establish a standard of purity of seeds for agricultural purposes.

Alfred T. Christenson, Berkeley gardener, died at the Cottage hospital in San Rafael, January 22, from injuries sustained the night before in Mill Valley, when an interurban train severed both of his legs at the knees.

Manager Picetti, of the flower and plant stand in the Emporium, which is operated by C. Navlet & Co., of San Jose, says his force is rushed, as everybody seems to be starting to plant roses and general nursery stock.

The Misses Hannon report business good at their store on Sutter street and stock better than it was a week ago.

In speaking of his experiences with street competition, a florist whose shop is in a locality particularly favorable to street vending remarked that frequently women buy flowers from the stands at the corner and then bring them in to him to make over and add a few first-class blooms or some fresh foliage. Sometimes they go farther than that, too. They buy violets from the street men and come into his place for a pin to pin them on with.

Mr. Stappenbeck, the American Florist, on Polk street, says he has had plenty of first-class roses all season for his own use. Wild buttercups have been shown at this store since before Christmas. Some wild irises have been received also.

As the result of a recent visit to San Francisco from New York officials of the American Express Co., local flower shippers are hopeful of getting a lower rate on all eastern shipments of California flowers, greens, etc. This, it is claimed, would have considerable influence in making toward a wider distribution of flowers from this state.

S. H. G.

Dayton, O.—William Hardert has leased the greenhouse formerly conducted by Mrs. E. M. Phebus, on rural route No. 14.

Portland, Ind. — Ophelia, Hoosier Beauty and Killarney Brilliant roses, grown by W. Frank & Son, won the Indiana silver rose trophy awarded at the recent Indianapolis meeting and exhibition of the State Florists' Association. The Portland men have carried off the prize for three consecutive years.

DOU BLE

THIS illustration shows you how the column rafter and truss are all bolted together.

Note that word bolted.

We do not trust to set screws or clamps to hold. Everything is bolted fast, even to the column cap being bolted through and through the pipe.

Now notice how all the members carry either double bolts or double pairs of bolts.

Particularly notice that the truss is a double angle iron, bolted to and on both sides of the rafter splice plate.

Observe in what a mechanically perfect way the splice plate is used as a joiner for all the members brought together at this point.

Following then, as we do, this same mechanical thoroughness in the entire construction, you can well understand why our houses have the reputation they have.

You know we go anywhere for business. Or to talk business.

You've been looking for a chance like this

You can't trade dollars with us every day, but we're willing to let you do it for a few days just to make you acquainted with two things you'll learn to swear by—

—American Snow White Paint and —American Simon Pure Putty

"Pigs is pigs" all right, but paint isn't paint. There's a difference. Paint for greenhouse purposes must stand a test that would make ordinarily good paint look like whitewash. Try any of it out on a piece of cypress—just like painting a sponge with water colors, you say? Surely. Then try American Snow White. It's its own advocate—it needs no defense.

$5000.00 worth of American Snow White Paint has been set aside by us to be sold AT COST—$2.10 a gallon, with an additional discount of 5% for cash with order. This is your chance.

You'll need American Simon Pure Putty in replacing your broken lights. Now don't buy this putty if you can buy the same quality cheaper—we can't.

100-lb. tin, $3.35 50-lb. tin, $1.75 25-lb. tin, 90c

The best recommendation we can give to American Snow White Paint and American Simon Pure Putty is the fact that they are used on the AGMCO Supergreenhouse——the highest-priced and the cheapest greenhouse.

MILLER FLORAL COMPANY

Farmington, Utah, Aug. 28, 1916.

John C. Moninger Co., Chicago, Ill.

Gentlemen: The three large houses you put up this year for us are now completed and planted with roses and carnations, and we wish to compliment you on your new style of steel construction.

We consider that the use of channel iron in the construction of greenhouses is the best idea ever put into use in greenhouse building, as it gives more strength to the house for the amount of shade than any other type we know of.

This last addition to our plant gives us now about 300,000 feet of glass, all of which is of your construction, and the new houses are so much superior to the old that there is no comparison between them, although the old houses are very fine houses.

Your new all-steel house is a marvel of strength, lightness and beauty, and not nearly as expensive as we thought it would be; and we would like to have the privilege of recommending it to other growers who want to build good greenhouses, and would be glad to show our new houses to anyone as an example of fine greenhouse construction.

We wish to thank you also for the prompt attention you gave to the few kicks we made on questions of immaterial importance, and hope to have the pleasure of doing more business with you. Respectfully yours,

(Signed) Miller Floral Co.,

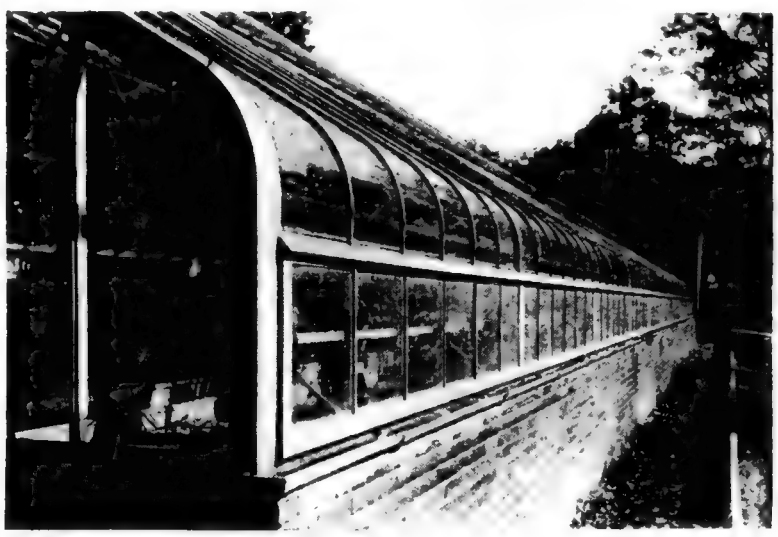
Catholic Cemetery Greenhouse

At Fort Wayne, Indiana

THE day of cheap wooden houses is past with cemeteries—past, just as it is with everything else, if pencils are sharpened and some real figuring done.

You know how those old houses used to be put away off out of sight. And no wonder—they certainly were not anything to look at.



But now, with the attractive houses we are building, they become part of the ornamental landscape scheme. Often they are the very center of it.

That is Superintendent Thos. Butler's house at the left. Double entrance doors give ample room to bring in ornamental tub plants.

This one at Fort Wayne is next the superintendent's residence, right along the main driveway, before the burial plots are reached. It is built with our Construction of Everlasting Lastingness.

That greenhouse problem of yours—let's talk it over together. Say when and where and we'll be there.

At the base of the curved eave is an angle iron, to which the side sash are hinged.

At the left, midway up this drive, the greenhouse is located.

New Chrysanthemums

is the name of the new Chrysanthemum that is announced by its raiser, Mr. Pockett, as being the superior in every way of Wm. Turner, of which it is a seedling. Since he raised both varieties, we may safely take his word for it. Louisa Pockett is larger than Turner; a better shape and as strong a grower as Marigold. We have 3000 plants ready for immediate delivery from 2½-in. pots, which if set out in the benches now will make ideal stock plants to propagate from. You must eventually have this variety—why not buy it now?

Also: Nag-ir-roc, W. H. Waite, Bol d'Or and President Everitt, our other Novelties for delivery at this time.

Trade Prices: $1.60 plant; $16.00 dozen; $100.00 hundred.

NEW CARNATIONS

ROSALIA—Cerise pink, large three and one-half inch flower of a true cerise pink color. Form is perfect. Calyx strong, never bursting. Stem is at all times strong and wiry. The growth is far above the average when we consider vigor, health and early and free flowering qualities. ROSALIA is a decided improvement on ROSETTE, having a better color and a better commercial habit.

OLD GOLD—We offer this as the earliest and most free flowering yellow carnation we have yet produced. A decided improvement over YELLOW PRINCE, being of a stronger growth, is perfectly clean and healthy, produces larger stems and more bloom. The color is a deep yellow with faint pink stripes.

The above two varieties, Price: $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000

NEW LATE CHRYSANTHEMUM

FALL BEAUTY—A large Japanese reflex of a pleasing pink color with a shading of deep cream to the base of the petals and center of the flower. Has an extra strong stem, is especially fine for Thanksgiving, maturing November 25th to December 10th. The color, combined with its being so late and its extra keeping qualities, makes it of especial commercial value.

Price: $3.50 per doz.; $30.00 per 100

NOVELTY ROSES

PRIMEROSE—ROSALIE (Baby Chatenay)

PRIMEROSE is very beautiful—a good healthy grower and free in production. Similar to Sunburst in color, except that it is a more vivid yellow, blended with coral pink. Large full buds, dark green large foliage and stiff stems. To the store man wanting something new in type and coloring, it will be a good attraction that will sell at fancy price.

ROSALIE, or Baby Chatenay, is a little charmer. Very long pointed buds, with stiff neck and full good foliage, very similar to its parent, the old Chatenay. A clear silver pink that is ideal for corsage work, because of its soft shade that will blend well with almost any shade of costume. Not as small as Brunner or the other small roses, but smaller than other standard varieties.

We have booked large orders for both these varieties for some growers that are considered expert judges of roses, which is best evidence of their worth.

M. HELLER

FOR YOUR PROTECTION, MR. FLORIST,

ACCEPT "SUPERIORA" MAGNOLIA LEAVES ONLY

EXTRACTS FROM OUR ENDORSEMENTS

Pittsburgh Cut Flower Co., of Pittsburgh, Pa., writes: "Your 'Superiora' Magnolia Leaves are the best leaves that we have ever handled, and we have had no complaint from any of our customers who bought these leaves from us. We have stored these leaves under all conditions and found that they will not mould; it is a very satisfactory leaf indeed."

W. Q. Potter Co., successor to the McCallum Co., of Cleveland, O., states: "Your 'Superiora' Magnolia Leaves are of the highest obtainable quality and second to none, such as has never been on the market before, for they are all of a one uniform size, which is the main thing in the making of wreaths. Also your leaves are uniform in color, which gives the finished wreath a rich tone quality, and this gets the results for the florists. Up to now all imitators of your leaves have failed in producing a quality which is worth mentioning. Every wholesale florist who wants to protect his trade should sell only your product. We have found that you have kept up the quality always, and we hope that you will continue to do so. The florists are willing to pay a few cents more per case on your goods, which are really cheaper in comparison with any other brands which are flooding the markets from time to time."

Jos. G. Neidinger Co., of Philadelphia, Pa., says: "We have tried all the Magnolia Leaves that are offered, but find your leaves to be far superior to all others, etc., etc."

The Barteldes Seed Store, of Denver, Colo., writes: "In regard to the quality of the 'Superiora' brand of Magnolia Leaves, we take pleasure in advising that we have found all of these leaves which we received from you to be of an even size and medium length. Both the size and the length being extremely uniform. They have also reached us in pliable condition, and altogether we have been quite well satisfied with them."

The Kervan Co., of New York City, writes: "We have handled your Magnolia leaves for several years and we take pleasure in announcing that our already long list of satisfied customers continues to grow. Since we have handled your leaves we have never had a complaint, but before that there was dissatisfaction."

The Montreal Floral Exchange, Montreal, Canada, writes: "Our business has increased with you this year over double of what we purchased last season, which is a good recommendation in itself that the trade in Canada appreciates the durability and keeping qualities of your leaf. We appreciate the integrity, promptness and good business methods that have characterized all your dealings with us."

Michigan Cut Flower Exchange, Detroit, Mich., says: "We have been handling your 'Superiora' Magnolia Leaves for the past six years and find in all this time that we have had no complaints but many compliments on these goods., etc., etc."

Jos. E. Koppelman, of Providence, R. I., writes: "We feel that we can sell your leaves to people who have used them once without any trouble. They rather pay the difference than to buy other leaves elsewhere, etc., etc."

McAlpine & McDonald, of Boston, Mass., write: "In answer to your letter of January 5th, requesting our endorsement on 'Superiora' Magnolia Leaves, would say that you might put us down as saying that we have found them a most satisfactory leaf in every respect, our trade being well pleased with them. We also wish to say that our business dealings with the Dr. H. Dux Co. have been the finest ever."

New England Florist Supply Co., of Boston, Mass., writes: "Have found 'Superiora' Magnolias the best leaves on the market. The sales on this leaf have been growing with the same rapidity as our business."

Wm. F. Kasting Co., of Buffalo, N. Y., writes: "Have always found that the 'Superiora' brand gives our customers entire satisfaction; in fact, they are the best leaves we have been able to obtain in the last few years."

Russin & Hanfling, of New York City, write: "In response to your letter of recent date, it gives us great pleasure to state that we have been very much satisfied with the quality of your 'Superiora' brand Magnolia Leaves. We have tried the Magnolias of several other manufacturers, but in consequence we find your leaves to be pre-eminent to all others placed upon the market, particularly with the view that your leaves are all of one uniform color, as well as being pliable and non-moulding."

Henry M. Robinson & Co., of Boston, Mass., write: "We are pleased to state that the quality of your leaves is certainly the best ever manufactured in this country, and it is a pleasure to offer such stock for sale, etc."

Reed & Keller, of New York City, say: ". . . and we beg leave to acknowledge receipt of your last shipment of Magnolias, and we are indeed pleased to say that they are superior in every way. We further state that our experience in leaves from other dealers has been very unsatisfactory; colors vary and leaves mould quickly, etc."

"SUPERIORA" BRAND MAGNOLIA LEAVES ARE SOLD BY EVERY WHOLESALE FLORIST IN THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA

AFTERMATH OF THE CARNATION MEETING

By unanimous consent, last week's meeting and exhibition of the American Carnation Society is put on record as one of the most successful in the history of the organization, interest, attendance and quality all being higher than in recent years. A mark set for Boston to emulate

IN many respects the Indianapolis meeting of the American Carnation Society, held last week, was the best in years, but the finest feature of it, probably, was the fact that so many different people participated. Anyone reading the list of prize-winners in last week's issue of The Review could not fail to note the unusual number of growers awarded premiums—there was no walk-away. No matter how fine it is for the individual to sweep the decks, it adds perceptibly to the general interest when the premiums are well divided.

Facetiously, this was called the home meeting of the Indiana Carnation Society — vice-president, secretary and treasurer were Hoosiers, and the president came from a contiguous state. Perhaps it had its effect in bringing out the local growers, but at any rate more of them exhibited than usual and most of them feel well repaid for it by the prizes they took.

The Meetings.

In the meetings, also, the general participation was a distinct stimulus to the interest. The elimination of long essays and the substitution of extemporaneous discuscussion brought many members to their feet with a few words on one point or another and made the sessions bright and snappy.

While it was voted to hold the next annual meeting at the usual date in 1918, at Boston, it was decided to accept an invitation of the Society of American Florists to participate in the National Flower Show at St. Louis in the spring of that year, the S. The result, therefore, will be that the east and the west both will have a chance next year to work up a carnation show as interesting as the Indiana one was.

The announced discussion of the "yellows" disease of carnations was led by Prof. Lempke, of the florists' experiment station at the University of Illinois. Richard Witterstaetter told of his experience with the variety Mrs. Valentine, having nearly lost the stock at one time by this disease. He found that the best way to grow the plants was in pots during the summer. Charles S. Strout stated that he experienced most trouble with Pink Delight. A. F. J. Baur described an experiment in which he took a dozen plants of each of several varieties, heavily feeding the eleven but leaving the other in the natural soil of early fall. In each case the eleven became diseased and the one plant continued healthy, convincing him to a certain extent that improper nutrition has a great deal to do with the yellows. After feeding some of these diseased plants one kind of food and others a different kind, some became better and others worse, which has partially proven to him that the proper nourishment will overcome this disease.

He thinks the carnation of today does not have the keeping qualities of those of some years ago and that they have lost a great percentage of their fragrance. THE FLORISTS' REVIEW

AFTERMATH OF THE CARNATION MEETING

By unanimous consent, last week's meeting and exhibition of the American Carnation Society is put on record as one of the most successful in the history of the organization, interest, attendance and quality all being higher than in recent years. A mark set for Boston to emulate

IN many respects the Indianapolis meeting of the American Carnation Society, held last week, was the best in years, but the finest feature of it, probably, was the fact that so many different people participated. Anyone reading the list of prize-winners in last week's issue of The Review could not fail to note the unusual number of growers awarded premiums—there was no walk-away. No matter how fine it is for the individual to sweep the decks, it adds perceptibly to the general interest when the premiums are well divided.

Facetiously, this was called the home meeting of the Indiana Carnation Society—vice-president, secretary and treasurer were Hoosiers, and the president came from a contiguous state. Perhaps it had its effect in bringing out the local growers, but at any rate more of them exhibited than usual and most of them feel well repaid for it by the prizes they took.

The Meetings.

In the meetings, also, the general participation was a distinct stimulus to the interest. The elimination of long essays and the substitution of extemporaneous discussion brought many members to their feet with a few words on one point or another and made the sessions bright and snappy.

While it was voted to hold the next annual meeting at the usual date in 1918, at Boston, it was decided to accept an invitation of the Society of American Florists to participate in the National Flower Show at St. Louis in the spring of that year, the S. A. F. placing $1,000 in premium money at the disposal of the society. The result, therefore, will be that the east and the west both will have a chance next year to work up a carnation show as interesting as the Indiana one was.

The announced discussion of the "yellows" disease of carnations was led by Prof. Lempke, of the florists' experiment station at the University of Illinois. Richard Witterstaetter told of his experience with the variety Mrs. Valentine, having nearly lost the stock at one time by this disease. He found that the best way to grow the plants was in pots during the summer. Charles S. Strout stated that he experienced most trouble with Pink Delight. A. F. J. Baur described an experiment in which he took a dozen plants of each of several varieties, heavily feeding the eleven but leaving the other in the natural soil of early fall. In each case the eleven became diseased and the one plant continued healthy, convincing him to a certain extent that improper nutrition has a great deal to do with the yellows. After feeding some of these diseased plants one kind of food and others a different kind, some became better and others worse, which has partially proven to him that the proper nourishment will overcome this disease.

The Market.

Nothing that has come up at a trade convention in recent years has been of greater interest to those concerned than was the discussion of the demand for carnations and the methods by which they are marketed. It has been asserted many times of late that the demand for carnations is decreasing, but there have been emphatic denials that this is the case. W. A. Clarke, of the Pittsburgh Cut Flower Co., started the ball rolling. He believes the demand is less vigorous than it was and he places the responsibility for it on the growers. He thinks the carnation of today does not have the keeping qualities of those of some years ago and that they have lost a great percentage of their fragrance. He also blamed the growers for rough handling and careless packing, causing the flowers to be in bad condition when they reach the market. David Ward disagreed, saying he believes most of the rough handling is done by the commission merchant. He also stated that the fancy stock grown at his establishment is not put up in bunches, as is the poorer grade, and that it was a bad method with good stock.

A. Rasmussen stated his opinion that cheap sales do the greatest damage, along with the small grower who tries to produce quantity, not quality, and sells the product at retail at a lower figure than good stock is worth at wholesale. He admitted, however, that locality makes a difference, such conditions perhaps not being met with everywhere.

Fred E. Dorner's views were that a better and closer selection of new varieties should be made and that packing and grading constitute a big item.

Charles S. Strout differed with Mr. Clarke, saying that the demand in his locality is growing rapidly and that the prices are good. He believes that the cheap sale conducted on the right plan is beneficial. He said that he makes special effort to let the people know when they are offering a bargain. This stock, which is the best on the place, is sold at 25 cents per dozen for one day only. It is not boxed or delivered and is sold strictly on a cash basis. The following day the price is back to 75 cents or $1, whatever the case may be. He believes that this method has increased the popularity of the carnation in his locality. At other times, when surplus stock is on hand, two hospitals and an old ladies' home have furnished an excellent outlet and the gifts were gratefully received.

A. F. J. Baur said he spoke merely from observation, as he sells his crop directly to the stores instead of through an agent and the largest part of the consumption is local. His belief is that most of the abuse of flowers happens in the retail establishments, through not giving this flower the proper care, as is given the rose.

R. B. Hayes seemed to think that carnations are marketed too soon after picking, saying that they should remain in water from eighteen to twenty hours in order to be well water-soaked. He stated that he has had good results by leaving them in water two or three days, while he has suffered from marketing freshly cut stock.

J. F. Ammann was of the opinion that it is a case of every man to his place—a good man for growing and a good man for grading, not a boy, but a man proficient in his line. If this course were pursued, stock would reach the market in much better condition.

A. J. Guttman vehemently declared that the demand for good carnations is growing in his locality. He feels that ignorance on the part of the venders causes careless handling. He feels confident that in the near future a closer cooperation between grower and retailer will be effected, which will be of benefit to both.

J. W. Rodgers also was of the opinion that grading is an important factor and that the setting of the prices should be left to the grower, the commission merchant and retailer governing themselves accordingly. C. Hagenburger agreed perfectly with this idea.

W. J. Vesey, Jr., seemed to think some wholesale customers are chronic complainers, that kind being in the minority, however. He said he has adopted a system of postcards, which he places with every invoice sheet sent out, asking for a report on the condition in which the stock arrived. The consignee is asked merely to write one word, yes or no, with his name, and to mail the card. These are put on file and at the end of the year are looked over to find who are the satisfied customers and who are not. He found this experiment so successful that he has installed it in all of his departments.

George Gause insisted that harmony is what is needed—harmony between growers, commission men and retailers. If this were accomplished a better market would follow. W. W. Coles believed that supply and demand should regulate the price.

The discussion closed as the judges returned with the premium for the best keeping vase of carnations, which was awarded to Hartje & Elder, of Indianapolis. This firm broke the record, taking three firsts on only two entries, one of fifty White Enchantress and one of fifty Washington.

A discussion arose as to who is responsible for goods shipped, the shipper or the consignee. This subject being a large one, it was barely touched upon, and, seeing that no satisfactory conclusion was in sight, adjournment was asked for and agreed upon.

Routine Affairs.

The committee appointed to pass on the reports of officers was as follows: S. J. Goddard, Framingham, Mass.; C. W. Johnson, Morgan Park, Ill.; John H. Dunlop, Toronto, Ont.

In the matter of the preliminary competition for the Dorner Memorial medal a recommendation was made to reduce the number of blooms required, but the decision was that the number remain fifty, instead of being reduced to twenty-five.

The secretary was authorized to continue the identification badge. Prof. Dorner moved that the names in these badges be typewritten rather than by hand, which was approved.

A committee of three on final resolutions was appointed: J. W. Rodgers, of Dayton, O.; J. H. Dick, of New York, and Prof. H. B. Dorner, of Urbana, Ill., the report to be heard at the close of the banquet.

The question of the similarity of the old variety, Beacon, and a variety distributed to a limited extent in the east last season under the name of Red Wing, was brought up. Although several asserted that the two varieties are practically identical, an equal number declared that as far as color and form of bloom are concerned they are similar, but that Red Wing is a more robust grower, growing taller, having a stronger calax and not splitting so badly. The matter was referred to a committee which will be appointed by the incoming president, as the society stands to discountenance the renaming of old varieties or the introduction of too-much-alike varieties under different names.

A. J. Guttman asked to have the new variety, Olive Whitman, rejudged for the certificate of merit. This was granted, with the result of a score of eighty-two points.

The Banquet.

As the banquet was given in the Riley room, where the show was held, the exhibition flowers were used as decorations, making an elaborate display. During the evening the entertainment included an orchestra and cabaret dancing. The special feature of the evening was a chariot of carnations and sweet peas drawn by two little girls, in which was seated the maid of honor representing the American Carnation Society. Attending her and seated at her feet was a smaller maid, representing the Indiana State Florists' Association. E. G. Hill, acting as toastmaster, introduced in his humorous way the following: Irwin Bertermann, to speak for the Indiana State Florists' Association; J. F. Ammann, to speak for the American Carnation Society; Hon. Chas. W. Bookwalter, to speak for the city; David Ward, to speak for the carnation; John H. Dunlop, to speak for Canada; David Geddis, to speak for the St. Louis spring show; A. F. J. Baur, to speak as secretary; Wm. J. Vesey, Jr., the president-elect; August Poehlmann, as an interested visitor; Albert Pochelon, to speak for the F. T. D., and Wm. Nicholson, as representative of the old guard. Wm. F. Gude telegraphed his regrets.

W. J. Vesey, Jr., as retiring president of the Indiana State Florists' Association and incoming president of the American Carnation Society, thanked his committees in general, especially commending the efforts of John Bertermann, Henry W. Rieman, Homer L. Wiegand, Fred H. Lemon, O. E. Steinkamp, Joseph H. Hill and Clarence Thomas. Following this, the report on final resolutions was read and the entertainment was closed by a verse from James Whitcomb Riley's "Old Sweetheart of Mine," in honor of the ladies.

Excursions.

While the men were attending the final session during the morning of the closing day, the ladies were shown the interesting sights of the city. In the afternoon the ladies and gentlemen joined in an auto trip that was filled with excitement. Just as the party was leaving, a fire broke out in the basement of the hotel and the fire department gave an exhibition run. Later, on the return trip, the driver of one of the machines was arrested for speeding and the occupants of the car walked the remainder of the way to the Maennerchor, where a buffet luncheon was served.

The party journeyed to the Baur & Steinkamp establishment, where there were several features of interest, the most noteworthy being a beautiful bed of Merry Christmas carnation, a bed of seedlings that provoked great admiration and a new propagating house in which were 90,000 cuttings.

An interesting trip via the boulevards ended at Bertermann's Cumberland range. Although the roses and carnations, which are the chief crops, were in excellent condition, there were other interesting sights, including a house of sweet peas and violets and a house of delphiniums, centaureas, snapdragons, winter-flowering giant pansies and mignonette.

Notes by Another Observer.

A few notes taken during the gathering of the clans at the American Carnation Society's annual meeting at Indianapolis, January 31, may be of interest at this time.

S. J. Goddard, of Framingham, Mass., stated, while unpacking his prize-winning carnations, that the blooms were picked January 25, packed January 29 and unpacked January 31 at Indianapolis. Although no ice was used, when the boxes were opened the blooms looked perfect. This remarkable condition was noted in practically all other shipments, and the atmospheric conditions at the exhibition were highly favorable to the blooms.

A striking contrast between the way Carnation Belle Washburn was grown by two local growers proved that this variety may be well grown by one grower and less so by another, even in the same locality.

That old favorite, Lawson, as seen at the Bertermann Bros. Co. place, showed itself as full of vigor and as floriferous as when it was more largely grown. Did the sight of this grand actor inspire some to question as to whether varieties of more recent introduction possess the stamina of their predecessors? The fine beds of Violet Princess of Wales seen at the Bertermann range were much admired. J. G. Heinl, of Terre Haute, Ind., said he was proud of the fact that he brought the first plants grown here, from Paris, and turned them over to J. A. Peterson, of Cincinnati, who grew them even finer than the Parisians. "This was in 1871," observed Mr. Heinl, "and just see how vigorous is the plant yet."

John H. Dunlop, of Toronto, ably represented the Dominion and, in commenting upon this, the best exhibition yet, he said that business was remarkably good at home, incidentally mentioning that the wholesale department for the month of December showed an increase of twenty-three per cent and the retail end an advance in proportion.

Albert Herr, of Lancaster, Pa., observed that positively all his fellow craftsmen would be at Boston next year, and doubtless would have been present this time had they the least idea of the great treat, floricultural and gastronomical, prepared for and enjoyed by those fortunate enough to be present.

Carl Hagenburger, of Mentor, O., showed a few plants of his dwarf solanum, which were covered with berries. This variety is sure to find favor.

Van Bochove & Bro., of Kalamazoo, Mich., sent their grower, A. Westveer, just to see what was being done by others. "For," observed Mr. Westveer, "this is the grandest object lesson to the grower who is interested in the new varieties. The grower notes the product, quizzes the introducer, and should—if he is the right sort—learn enough to more than pay for the expense incurred on the trip."

The charming display of sweet peas staged by Peter Weiland, of Newcastle, Ind., was the center of attraction. John Dunlop, in commenting on the lovely bunch of Rose Queen, incidentally mentioned that he is trying out eleven varieties of Yarrawa type and looks for big results. Discussing the frequent failure of sweet pea seeds to germinate, Mr. Dunlop says they usually soak the seeds for twenty-four hours, and if the skin is hard crack it. The grower then invariably obtains almost a full percentage of germination, especially so in whites, the shyest to seed and the hardest to sprout.

John Bertermann remarked that he is not worrying about foreign valley pips, as he has been successful in raising his own stock.

It was a felicitous moment when, during the visit to the Hill establishments at Richmond, a member of the party suggested the name Columbia for a lovely debutante rose of next year. The sugg stion was immediately adopted and later pledged at the gathering at the Country Club, coupling it with the name of its popular owner, E. G. Hill. Red Rover, a glowing crimson, is to be introduced at the same time; an escort, as it were. Other beautiful seedlings were noted, from pure white through the loveliest tints and shades to deep crimson, some of perfect form and lacking in fragrance, others the reverse. The unanimous verdict was that right here is found much that goes to make the queen of flowers so justly popular. Mr. Hill later in a postprandial talk urged those present to equally interest themselves in the advancement of the divine flower, as he was doing with the rose.

Continuing the Discussion.

The twenty-sixth annual meeting of the American Carnation Society, as regards number and quality of exhibits, undoubtedly was the most successful ever held. One of the outstanding impressions was that of the prevailing good fellowship and unity of interest among members. It would seem that the business meetings are not attended by all of the visiting members, as they should be. Many of the members lose the best part of these conventions by not attending the meetings and entering into the general discussions. While the social side of our conventions should not be lost sight of, it would seem important, if the carnation growers are desirous of placing the flower back on the pedestal of popular favor, that they should not neglect the educational side, including those opportunities for an exchange of ideas that are open to the members at these meetings.

The discussion on the marketing of carnations was both vigorous and to the point and brought out many valuable ideas. It is quite evident that both the growers and the wholesalers can in many instances improve their methods of handling carnations, to the end that they go into the hands of the buyers in proper condition. The lack of demand for carnations does not seem to be due to any lack of varieties possessing all the admirable qualities of size, color, fragrance and keeping qualities, but is due more to the smaller margin of profit realized in the handling than is possible with roses and, in fact, many other flowers handled by the retailer. Would it not be well for the retailer to demand only the best in quality, when buying, and then ask a price that will give him a proper margin of profit? It is a well known fact that the better grades of carnations have sold at a lower price than they should, when cost of production is taken into consideration. If the retailer will put a ban on the poorer grades of carnations, at the same time showing a willingness to pay the grower a fair price for quality, and insist on stock that has been properly cut, packed and handled by both grower and wholesaler, he will soon force both grower and wholesaler to deliver carnations that will bring a price commensurate with the quality. True, this will force an immense number of carnations into the hands of the street peddlers at a low price and would mean practically no returns to the growers of poor stock, but it would seem that if the carnation is to retain its proper degree of popularity with the buying public the large number of growers of uniformly inferior stock are due to receive the jolt of finding their stock practically unsalable. I believe the wholesale men could do a great deal to aid by notifying their consignors immediately on the reception of poor grade stock that the stock in question is practically unsalable, and impressing upon their consignors that shipments of such stock will not pay for the express and commission for selling.

A CLUB AT COLUMBUS.

Thirteen enthusiastic florists assembled at the Neil House on the evening of January 29 and formed what will be known as the Columbus Florists' Club. After several hours of lively discussion, it was agreed that the club be conducted on a business basis, the object of the organization being to study all phases of the business, but particularly advertising, selling and growing. At each of the meetings, which are scheduled to be held twice a month, a paper prepared by a member on any subject of interest to the trade will be read. At different times arrangements will be made with prominent florists of other cities to address the club members on florists' problems.

The following were elected officers for one year: President, Alfred C. Hottes, professor in floriculture of the Ohio State University; vice-president, Walter Stephens, of S. F. Stephens & Son; secretary, A. Munk, of Munk Floral Co.; treasurer, Walter Engel, superintendent of the Munk Floral Co. range. The various committees and the work of the committees will be worked out by the officers before the next meeting.

Memberships in the club will be limited to proprietors, managers and advanced students of floriculture. Any candidate for membership present at the next meeting will be admitted. Thereafter new members will be elected, as customary. The fee for charter members will be $1, after which the entrance fee will be $5, with 50 cents monthly dues.

MAY QUARANTINE ALL OUR STOCK

SENATE PASSES BILL GIVING DANGEROUS AUTHORITY

PROPOSED NEW LEGISLATION.

Drastic and Dangerous.

Prior to the passage of the plant quarantine law of 1912, agitation was worked up by lectures, magazine articles, pamphlets, etc., with the evident object of creating an atmosphere favorable to its passage. The impression was given that about all of the insect pests and plant diseases that affect our forests and farm crops were imported into the United States by selfish nurserymen and florists—along with the plants and nursery stock which they imported from Europe. This propaganda resulted in the passage of the plant quarantine act in 1912, though the agitation continues.

To operate the plant quarantine act, the Federal Horticultural Board was created, with headquarters in Washington, D. C.; it consists of five bureau chiefs of the Department of Agriculture, with Dr. C. L. Marlatt as chairman. All of these men are well qualified for their duties and though the law gives them almost autocratic powers, power to quarantine any foreign country or locality, they have used this power with commendable discretion and moderation. But this does not satisfy a group of state entomologists, who demand nothing less than an absolute quarantine against the importation of plant life from all foreign sources.

State Entomologists Get Busy.

At a meeting of entomologists about a year ago, resolutions were passed which in effect requested the Federal Horticultural Board to put this absolute quarantine into effect, but as no action was taken, the entomologists interested the American Forestry Association in its plans. This association consists largely of foresters, entomologists, lumber men and others interested in our forests. Naturally, such men know little about the commercial side of the nursery or florists' business, but when they were informed—by men who should know better—that an absolute quarantine of all imported plant life was necessary for the protection of our forests and farm crops, they took up the subject with enthusiasm and called a special conference in Washington, D. C., to adopt measures to stop importation, even of the raw materials.

A One-sided Conference.

The conference was held January 19. I, as chairman of the legislative committee of the S. A. F., and J. McHutchison, of New York, a member of my committee, were present on behalf of the S. A. F. The legislative committee of the American Association of Nurserymen was also there, besides several individual members of the nurserymen's and florists' organizations. Many speeches and papers were delivered advocating an absolute quarantine, but no opportunity was given for discussion after each paper; so the horticultural side of the question was not voiced. Resolutions were unanimously adopted favoring an absolute quarantine, and to show what it means to the florists and nurserymen, I quote from the proposed bill the first two sections, as follows:

Sec. 1. That it shall be unlawful for any person to import or offer for entry into the United States any nursery stock, Provided: That the Secretary of Agriculture may import, grow and propagate nursery stock in small quantities for experimental and scientific purposes, upon such conditions and under such regulations as he may advise.

Sec. 2. That for the purpose of this Act the term "nursery stock" shall include all field-grown florists' stock, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, grafts, scions, buds, bedding plants, all herbaceous plants, bulbs, roots, and other plants and plant products for propagation, except field, vegetable, flower and tree seeds.

Effect of the Bill.

This bill, if passed, will shut out practically everything the florists now import, including Azalea Indica, bay trees and araucarias, valley pips for forcing or any other purpose, Japanese lily bulbs, French bulbs, Dutch bulbs, Manetti stocks used for greenhouse grafting of roses, orchids and nursery stock of every kind. It would not only shut out dracæna plants, but the canes which are necessary to produce them. It would shut out kentia plants; also the seeds necessary to grow our own plants. "What for?" you ask; the answer is, "To save our forests." If any member of the S. A. F. thinks it necessary to stop the importation of valley pips, Manetti stocks or Japanese lily bulbs to protect our forests, I should like to hear from him.

Arrangements were made in the conference committee so that the measure would not be introduced in Congress until committees from the national associations of florists and nurserymen had an opportunity of conferring with a special committee of the American Forestry Association appointed for that purpose. This arrangement shows the right spirit, and, though the special committee consists mostly of state inspectors, we hope to be able to show them that while their plan, if put into operation, would put back the florists' business many years, it would not go far in protecting our forests or farm crops or reduce the diseases which afflict them to any appreciable degree.

A Crisis in Trade Affairs.

The measures that have threatened our interests for several years have now reached a crisis. We shall need on our committee men of ability who are willing to subordinate their personal interests to the welfare of the trade—men who understand why stock is imported, why at least the raw materials are necessary to our welfare—men who know something about insect pests and plant diseases and who can adequately express their views.

Since our policy will likely have to be defined before our annual convention in August, the nurserymen's convention being held in June, I will seek the advice of the executive committee of the S. A. F. on the subject, but as the matter is such a vital one to many of our members, I deem it wise to inform the general trade through the medium of The Review and trust the Editor will give this report the publicity it deserves.

Wm. F. Gude,
Chairman Legislative Committee of the S. A. F.

THE SENATE ACTS.

February 3 the Senate gave the Secretary of Agriculture unlimited authority to establish absolute quarantine of all horticultural products by adopting an amendment to the present quarantine law, making Section 8 read as follows:

Sec. 8. That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed to quarantine any state, territory or district of the United States, or any portion thereof, when he shall determine that such quarantine is necessary to prevent the spread of a dangerous plant disease or insect infestation, new to or not theretofore widely prevalent or distributed within and throughout the United States.

The amendment goes on to provide that the law shall apply to any class of nursery stock or any other class of plants, fruits, vegetables, roots, bulbs, seeds, or other plant products, or any class of stone or quarry products, or any other article of any character whatsoever, capable of carrying any dangerous plant disease or insect infestation, specified in the notice of quarantine.

The secretary is required to hold a public hearing before promulgating a quarantine.

The House already had passed the agricultural appropriation bill. It now goes to a conference committee. If the conference agrees to the quarantine amendment it no doubt will become the law.

THRIPS ON CYCLAMENS.

Kindly let me know what ails the enclosed cyclamen leaf. Can you tell me the cause and the remedy for this trouble? I had plants in the same condition last year. P. H.—O.

The leaf forwarded was covered with thrips. This usually comes from an dry atmosphere and is accentuated if the plants, in addition, get too dry at the roots. A remedy is to keep more moisture in the atmosphere and spray the affected plants frequently with a fine spray nozzle. If you lay the plants on their sides and use a nicotine or soap spray and direct it carefully at the lower sides of the leaves, you will exterminate a large majority of the pests.

and doubtless would have been present this time had they the least idea of the great treat, floricultural and gastronomical, prepared for and enjoyed by those fortunate enough to be present.

Carl Hagenburger, of Mentor, O., showed a few plants of his dwarf solanum, which were covered with berries. This variety is sure to find favor.

Van Bochove & Bro., of Kalamazoo, Mich., sent their grower, A. Westveer, just to see what was being done by others. "For," observed Mr. Westveer, "this is the grandest object lesson to the grower who is interested in the new varieties. The grower notes the product, quizzes the introducer, and should if he is the right sort—learn enough to more than pay for the expense incurred on the trip."

The charming display of sweet peas staged by Peter Weiland, of Newcastle, Ind., was the center of attraction. John Dunlop, in commenting on the lovely bunch of Rose Queen, incidentally mentioned that he is trying out eleven varieties of Yarrawa type and looks for big results. Discussing the frequent failure of sweet pea seeds to germinate, Mr. Dunlop says they usually soak the seeds for twenty-four hours, and if the skin is hard crack it. The grower then invariably obtains almost a full percentage of germination, especially so in whites, the shyest to seed and the hardest to sprout.

John Bertermann remarked that he is not worrying about foreign valley pips, as he has been successful in raising his own stock.

It was a felicitous moment when, during the visit to the Hill establishments at Richmond, a member of the party suggested the name Columbia for a lovely debutante rose of next year. The suggestion was immediately adopted and later pledged at the gathering at the Country Club, coupling it with the name of its popular owner, E. G. Hill. Red Rover, a glowing crimson, is to be introduced at the same time; an escort, as it were. Other beautiful seedlings were noted, from pure white through the loveliest tints and shades to deep crimson, some of perfect form and lacking in fragrance, others the reverse. The unanimous verdict was that right here is found much that goes to make the queen of flowers so justly popular. Mr. Hill later in a postprandial talk urged those present to equally interest themselves in the advancement of the divine flower, as he was doing with the rose.

Continuing the Discussion.

The twenty-sixth annual meeting of the American Carnation Society, as regards number and quality of exhibits, undoubtedly was the most successful ever held. One of the outstanding impressions was that of the prevailing good fellowship and unity of interest among members. It would seem that the business meetings are not attended by all of the visiting members, as they should be. Many of the members lose the best part of these conventions by not attending the meetings and entering into the general discussions. While the social side of our conventions should not be lost sight of, it would seem important, if the carnation growers are desirous of placing the flower back on the pedestal of popular favor, that they should not neglect the educational side, including those opportunities for an exchange of ideas that are open to the members at these meetings.

The discussion on the marketing of carnations was both vigorous and to the point and brought out many valuable ideas. It is quite evident that both the growers and the wholesalers can in many instances improve their methods of handling carnations, to the end that they go into the hands of the buyers in proper condition. The lack of demand for carnations does not seem to be due to any lack of varieties possessing all the admirable qualities of size, color, fragrance and keeping qualities, but is due more to the smaller margin of profit realized in the handling than is possible with roses and, in fact, many other flowers handled by the retailer. Would it not be well for the retailer to demand only the best in quality, when buying, and then ask a price that will give him a proper margin of profit? It is a well known fact that the better grades of carnations have sold at a lower price than they should, when cost of production is taken into consideration. If the retailer will put a ban on the poorer grades of carnations, at the same time showing a willingness to pay the grower a fair price for quality, and insist on stock that has been properly cut, packed and handled by both grower and wholesaler, he will soon force both grower and wholesaler to deliver carnations that will bring a price commensurate with the quality. True, this will force an immense number of carnations into the hands of the street peddlers at a low price and would mean practically no returns to the growers of poor stock, but it would seem that if the carnation is to retain its proper degree of popularity with the buying public the large number of growers of uniformly inferior stock are due to receive the jolt of finding their stock practically unsalable. ST. VALENTINE'S DAY

GETTING NEW BUSINESS.

Ideas in Salesmanship.

Realizing that florists as a class have given comparatively little thought to that phase of salesmanship which relates to drawing customers within voice-range, Hilmer V. Swenson has prepared the following letter on methods of attracting attention at St. Valentine's day:

"To create business for St. Valentine's day as much thought should be given the advertising and sales problems as is ordinarily given to the selection of flowers. The new avenue for sales, which St. Valentine's day has opened, proves conclusively that you don't have to rely entirely on the every-day use of flowers for increased business.

"Suggestion has made St. Valentine's day what it is for the florist—and suggestion's most powerful tool has been advertising. Advertising in some form or other, whether it has been by word of mouth, signs in windows, ads in the newspapers, circulars or what not, is responsible for the great volume of business done on this day and no one can dispute it.

An Unlimited Field.

"Other flower days as good as St. Valentine's day, Mothers' day and Thanksgiving, can be eventually created by suggestion or, in broader terms, advertising. But the development still to be done for St. Valentine's day is today the most urgent problem, so let us then consider a few ways and means to accomplish this.

"It has been proven that older people make use of flowers as valentines as much as younger people. Therefore, your chance for appeal is almost unlimited. We urge, then, that you direct your advertising to the older men as much as the younger and we give, in the following, several suggestions on how to go about it:

"A good way to reach the younger set is to obtain a list of members of dancing and social clubs of your city. In many cases, these clubs feature a St. Valentine's day affair. Mail each member a folder about four days before the date affair is to be given. Every young man having an engagement for this party will be a most excellent prospect for a flower valentine purchase. One of our customers realized 200 orders from 500 names circulated in this manner. Another excellent way to get a good list of young men is to obtain a list of all the school, college or university fraternity members. Nine fraternities out of ten give a St. Valentine's function of some sort. Aside from that, few fraternity members are without a 'girl' and are prodigal in bestowing floral gifts on her.

The Older Men.

"Older men will respond to the suggestion, 'Send her a Flower Valentine,' and this class of business is extremely satisfactory because of the larger amount of the purchase. One of the best means of reaching the right buyers is to obtain a list of secret society members. One of our customers obtained a list of all the Shriners in his city and mailed a folder the day before St. Valentine's day, so that it reached these men at their offices on the morning of St. Valentine's day. He informs us his telephone was kept busy most of the day. In soliciting the business man, bear in mind that the average man is busy, so don't mail the folder to him a week before St. Valentine's day and expect him to remember, no matter how favorable the appeal to him. You must catch the busy business man at the psychological moment.

Stunt Delivery.

"Occasionally a 'stunt' is a good thing. To those interested enough to go to a little trouble, we suggest a plan originated by us for one of our customers and which proved the talk of the town in which he was located. He selected a bright little boy about 8 years old, a nervy little fellow who was not afraid to carry out his part. He dressed this boy in a bright red suit, attached a pair of wings to him, and over his shoulder hung a bow and arrows—in other words, he reproduced Cupid. In a heart-shaped bag, this boy carried a number of St. Valentine's day folders. He then had the boy call on every business man in his neighborhood and instructed him to deliver the folder to the man personally with the remark, something like this, 'Mr. (naming the florist) requested me to deliver this message to you personally, Mr. Smith.' The method of delivery of these folders could not help but make the busiest business man stop and read the message and the message was brought most forcibly to his attention because of the unique way the florist used to deliver it. This stunt brought excellent returns in orders and to this day is talked about in the community."

CARPET BEDDING PLANTS.

Are Alyssum Little Gem and Tom Thumb suitable for bordering a bed of alternantheras and similar bedding plants? How far apart should these plants be set? Do you think the blue varieties of lobelias will do well in our Minnesota climate? How far apart should they be set? How far apart should plants of dwarf Phlox Drummondii be set? S. J. U.—Minn.

Such alyssums as Tom Thumb and Little Gem are of erect habit, growing on the average to a height of six inches and six inches in diameter. Plant them five to six inches apart. Blue lobelias, I am afraid, would only succeed moderately well in Minnesota. Near the seaboard, where the nights are cool, they do fairly well. They are close-growing plants and during spells of hot, moist and sunless weather rot badly. I would not consider them as dependable as alyssums, although they are beautiful where they succeed. Dwarf Phlox Drummondii should be set six inches apart for bedding purposes. C. W.

London, England.—Because of war conditions, the R. H. S. has decided to abandon the Chelsea and Holland House shows for 1917.

Copenhagen, Denmark.—There are said to be upwards of 6,000,000 lily of the valley pips of German origin in Danish hands, shipment of which is prevented by the refusal of the British authorities to issue permits for the stock to pass the blockade.

Belfast, Ireland.—Alex. Dickson & Sons, Ltd., known the world over as the introducers of about 200 varieties of roses from the nursery at Newtownards and allied with Robert Scott & Son, of Sharon Hill, Pa., have just opened a new double 5-story building here for the flower seed business.

London, England.—An English trade paper says: "There seems to be considerable and not unnatural soreness among American seedsmen over the confiscation of remittances sent to Germany for cyclamen and other seeds. Such remittances are, of course, contraband and a considerable number have passed into the hands of the British authorities."

London, England.—The war office has given notice of its intention to take possession of all raffia except stocks of less than 200 pounds, no dealings being permitted without special license.

Hamilton, Bermuda.—The acreage of Harrisii has again been reduced, between increased demand for food crops and decreased demand for bulbs, and it looks as though a continuation of present conditions might result in the practical extinction of the bulb industry.

Paris, France.—The nursery and seed trade interests in this country are looking beyond the approaching season, to the one in which war restraints shall be removed. On every hand the discussion is not of present conditions, but of the conditions which must be met when the war is over. The demand is for organization to meet German competition.

London, England.—The plan of the Board of Agriculture to regulate the area and labor given to each crop, in the interest of the national food supply, resulted in a meeting January 15 of 150 leading growers of cut flowers and pot plants, who organized the National Florists' Association of Great Britain to look after the interests of market growers.

ROSE GRAFTING.

The Stocks.

The Manetti stocks should be potted in 2½-inch pots and placed in a temperature of about 45 to 48 degrees. They should be thoroughly watered and then sprayed at least twice a day. The water from the spraying will be sufficient until they begin to show root action.

It is not necessary to wait until they start breaking before using them. As soon as they show root action the sap is active enough to start grafting.

Watch the root action. It will pay to knock out the first ones potted, select those that are starting and begin grafting at once, so as to get as many as possible in during the first part of February.

When the Manetti begins to make growth, especially when it is leafing out, you will find that you are not striking as good a percentage of grafts as before.

So much for the care of the Manetti stocks.

The Grafting Case.

The next most important part of grafting is the building of the grafting box or getting it ready. If one has a box built for the purpose, clean it out thoroughly and give it a good coat of whitewash. Be sure that the sashes are properly fitted, so that the box will be as near air-tight as possible. The least draught on fresh cut grafts is dangerous, especially where the wood is a little soft. If once they wilt you may as well throw them away, for they will not catch.

For the benefit of those who have no box and intend building one, I will offer a few suggestions: Often you visit places where they graft only for their own use and have a poorly constructed box on a side bench, where drip from the gutter or back wall is causing fungus. With such equipment or without the proper piping to keep the temperature right, grafting is discouraging and far from profitable.

The Best Location.

Select a middle bench five and a half or six feet wide and fit sashes to both sides. Place a ridge of 2x4 through the center of the bench. Make it high enough so that the sashes will have the proper pitch to drain the moisture that accumulates inside when the box has been watered down and closed. Hinge the sashes to the ridge, which will save a lot of trouble in raising and lowering, when it comes time to ventilate.

Use an 8-inch sideboard, so that the plants will have plenty of room after about five inches of sifted ashes are put in to stand the grafts on. Ashes are a great deal better than sand, as one is less liable to get fungus in the box. Put a tight partition across the box for every three sashes, so that the plants can be ventilated in sections as they grow. It generally takes ten days before the grafts are caught well enough to stand ventilating. Give them only a little air to start with, increasing each day as they harden up.

Selecting the Wood.

When selecting the grafting wood be careful not to get wood that is too hard. If the thorns are beginning to turn black the wood is by all means too hard. Care must also be taken in regard to wood that is too soft. Wood that can be easily crushed by placing it between thumb and forefinger is too soft. Any wood infested with red spider or from sickly, overwatered stock is always sure to be a failure.

Do not take off any large quantity of wood at one time, the object being to prevent it from drying out. It is important to keep it wet from the time it is cut off until it is grafted and placed in the case.

In making the cuts on the Manetti and on the scion be sure they are perfectly clean; the slightest speck of dirt on either cut when it is tied will cause trouble. Often they catch and start growing (I have seen them make fine 4-inch stock) before they show black spots on the graft and become loose on one side, eventually dying. It is safe to say that ninety-eight per cent of all grafts acting in this manner do so because of carelessness in getting dirt between the cuts, or from the use of a dull knife that ruffled the pith of the wood.

A Close Union.

When tying the grafts care should be taken not to move the wood out of place, especially where the Manetti stock is heavier than the scion. The bark of the two must be a perfect fit on one side. The same applies to side grafts or those inserted on two-eyed grafts; the wood should be cut on both sides.

Either raffia or string can be used for tying. I prefer common white string; it is quicker to work and does not hold water around the cut so much as raffia, although either can be used with good results.

Little water should be used on the grafts the first ten days they are in the case. If the Manetti is thoroughly soaked when grafting, a light spraying daily with a rubber cut flower sprayer is sufficient, providing the cinders in the bottom of the case have been well soaked before the pots are placed on it.

When the grafts are ready to take out of the box and be placed on the bench they should be shaded a little on bright days, as the growth is soft. It generally takes six to ten days before they can stand the full rays of the sun.

Waycross, Ga.—The Satilla Pecan Orchard & Stock Co., capitalized at $50,000, has been organized here, Parks & Reed being the attorneys. The charter permits a general nursery and florists' business being done.

Montgomery, Ala.—At the recent "Made in Montgomery" exposition the Rosemont Gardens had an elaborate display in connection with the electric company, the florist showing a wedding decoration and the electric concern staging household utility wedding gifts.

Prescott, Ariz.—One of the pioneers of the western country, William Needham Kelly, who settled in Prescott fifty years ago, died last month from acute indigestion, at the age of 81. He was a prominent Mason and had been associated with his wife in the Terrace Cottage Greenhouse. Mrs. Kelly and a daughter survive.

Dallas, Tex.—The mayor designated the week beginning January 29 as "Rose and Shrubbery Planting Week" and the trade felt the stimulus.

Atlanta, Ga.—Wachendorf Bros. say they are having "considerable trouble with a fungus which originates in the wood of the floor of our greenhouse benches. This fungus spreads through the ashes, then makes its way through the drain holes in the pots to the soil, where it spreads until the soil has the appearance of a ball of frost, resulting in the loss of every plant. Our benches are repaired every summer, allowed to dry out thoroughly, all decayed wood removed, and then whitewashed with hot lime." If some of the readers of The Review who have had similar trouble will suggest a remedy this paper will be pleased to print it for the information of all.

OPEN LETTERS from READERS

CURE FOR PRIMULA POISONING.

Under "Open Letters from Readers" there recently appeared several articles in which the writers suggested remedies for primula poisoning of the hands and face. Two of my family, as well as myself and an employee, are subject to this form of poisoning, but we have a simple remedy that never fails to stamp out the irritation whenever it appears. Instantaneous relief is found by applying to the affected parts a mixture consisting of equal parts of lime water and olive oil. The one afflicted does not have to wait even two or three days for results. The irritation is checked at once and in a day or two the effects of the poisoning have disappeared.

TOMATOES UNDER GLASS.

Here is a new one and a good one for your subscriber, T. E. H.—Can., who asks for the best method of pollenizing tomatoes. Providing his houses have electric wiring, as have most of those recently erected, let him take a portable electric fan with a long feed wire; with one of the boys to jar the plants and shake the pollen loose, let him move the fan about in the house, directing the breeze over the plants, first from one angle and then from another. The gentle breeze created by the fan will distribute the pollen thoroughly throughout the house. The work should be done on a bright day, when the air in the house is as dry as possible.

We recently published a small advertisement of tomato seed in The Review and received so many inquiries that we are inclined to think a nice business might be built up on greenhouse-grown tomato seeds. So far as we know, no one in this country is growing tomato seeds under glass. The seedsmen here supply only outdoor-grown seeds, but the English seedsmen recognize the importance of supplying indoor-grown seed, grown and ripened under the artificial conditions required of the plants in the future crop. Winter crops of tomatoes in England yield ten to twelve pounds to the plant, while in this country the winter does not average over two to four pounds to the plant. By judicious seed selection from disease-resistant, prolific plants grown in the greenhouse, we think we can obtain just as large a crop as the growers do in England.

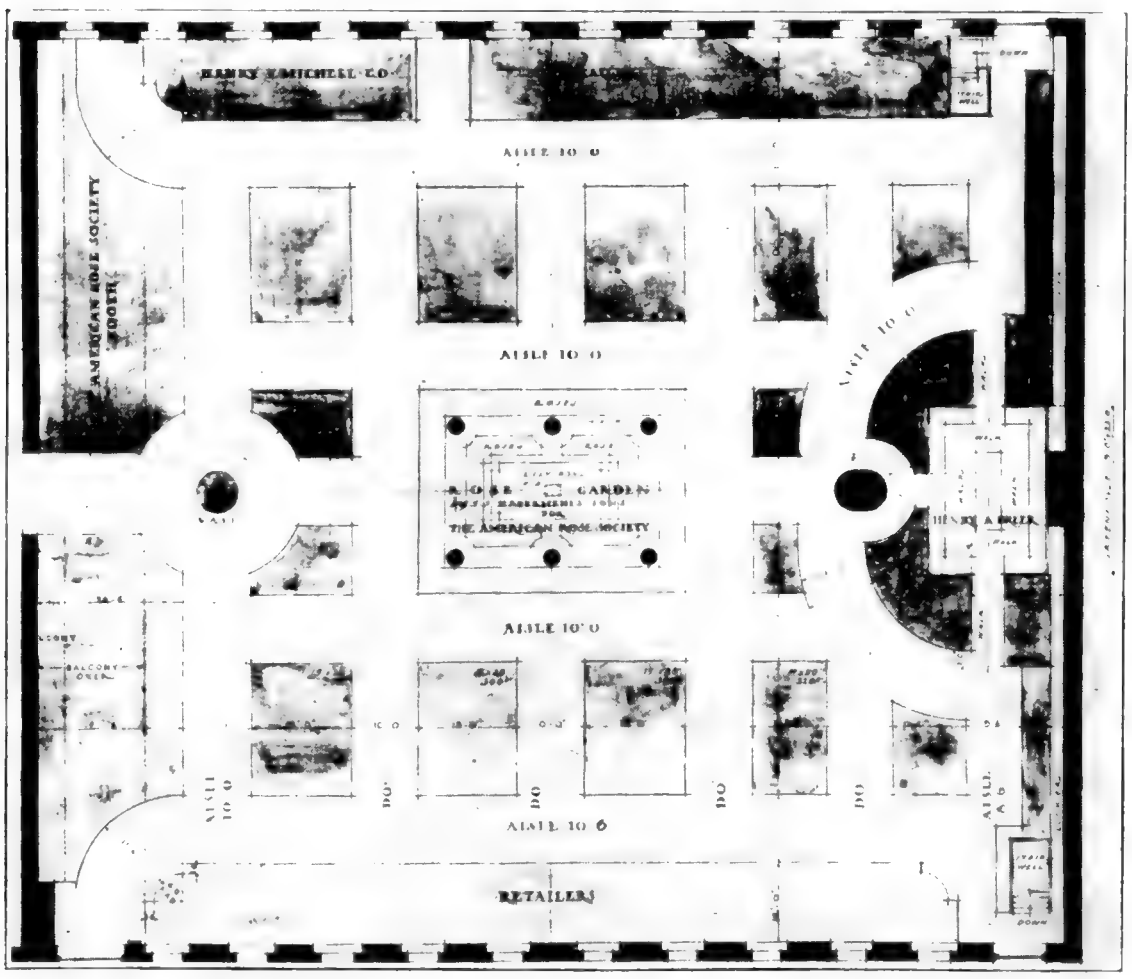
WHEN FORMOSA BULBS FAIL.



I force only a few Easter lilies, but enough of them to know that the lily grower has his troubles and sorrows. During the last two years I have visited growers who make Easter lilies a feature, and, to a man, each of them complained, and vigorously, too. When one sees 100 lilies in the hands of a competent grower, lilies that were all potted the same day, with some of them complete failures, others with twisted foliage and those that look fairly well ranging in height from two to eighteen inches, one knows at once that there is something vitally wrong with the bulbs. My observations lead me to place the entire blame on the bulb growers in Japan, or Formosa; not in shipping diseased bulbs, but in harvesting the bulbs before they are mature, in order to beat the other fellows to the market. The Japanese in a way attempt to put blinds over our eyes by packing the bulbs in soil, so that the bulbs may ripen en route. The real trouble is not here, as this method brings the bulbs to us in a fresh and plump condition. The actual injury is done when the growers, in their anxiety to reach our market early, cut off the tops too soon and thereby rob the bulbs of Nature's finishing touch, which is so essential to perfect maturity.

It is well known that Nature's last effort, in all such cases, is her greatest. At the last moment, so to speak, she draws on the reserve forces in stems and leaves, and finishes her work. This is easily evident to any onion grower. He can easily see the superficial effect on the bulbs at the last stages of ripening. Of how much greater importance must be the effect on the vitals of the bulbs! If we harvest lily bulbs before Nature says "Ready," we are certain to suffer.

The bulbs may appear all right, "ripe and solid," but if they have been robbed of Nature's cream by the unscrupulous or ignorant grower, then we, at this end of the line, are certain to suffer. I maintain that a few days are of such vital importance that a grower, having an acre or two to harvest, may begin to harvest too soon, but the latter half of his crop will be perfectly matured before he reaches it. Nature puts her "Ready" sign on every bulb in the dead stem. Every grower knows full well when they should be dug. Our importers are to blame if they hurry orders. I predict that in the near future the slogan of the lily bulb dealer will be "Perfectly matured bulbs," and the pot grower will know what to expect in his crop and will hold the importer strictly to account.

We Americans count too much on days, and too little on the ills our hurry may bring. The lily business is run on a too high speed. We must "shift into second" if we would attain that maximum success which Nature intends and for which we all work.

THE NEBRASKANS.

I would like to make a statement in regard to the report in The Review in the issue of January 25, about the "Nebraskans' Meeting." The Nebraska Florists' Society up to the last session did not have an independent organization, but held its annual meeting in conjunction with the Nebraska State Horticulturists' Society; also the flower show was staged under that society, which also paid the premiums offered, as was the case this year.

VINE FOR SUN PORCH.

I enclose a rough diagram of my sun porch. This porch is heated in winter by hot water and is enclosed with double windows. The temperature probably never falls below 50 degrees at night and rises to 70 and 80 degrees during the day. The north wall, of course, is the side of the house, and the chimney from the furnace runs up through it. The wall is of rough cement. An abundance of daylight gets through the windows, but probably little direct sunlight falls on the wall itself.

I am desirous of growing some kind of vine on this wall, flowering preferred, of an evergreen nature, either clinging or one that needs support. Your suggestion as to the best vine for this purpose would be appreciated.

G. M.—Ia.

There could be no better plant for your purpose than Ficus repens, which grows rapidly and clings closely to stone, brick or wood. This vine would soon cover the entire wall, if given proper care. I cannot recommend any evergreen flowering plant that would thrive under such conditions as you describe. The ficus can be planted in boxes seven inches deep, eight inches wide and of any given length, or in a bed, if such could be provided.

FLOWER SHOW PUBLICITY.

In the publicity work for the New York spring flower show a lithographed design is being used in many ways, as a poster, as a posterette and as the cover for the official catalogue, which is full of ads. The design is shown in the accompanying illustration. The idea is that by using the same picture for the several purposes the publicity is coordinated.

GROWING EXHIBITION MUMS.

[A paper by Elmer D. Smith, of Adrian, Mich., read at a meeting of the Cleveland Florists' Club, in Cleveland, O., February 5, 1917.]

Strong cuttings make strong plants; let us first consider the care of the old plants from which we intend to propagate. The method employed by most gardeners on private estates, setting aside pots of the previous year in a light, airy position, giving them a low temperature with careful attention to watering, will supply excellent cuttings. Those who are not so fortunate as to have pot-grown stock can, by careful selection from bench-grown plants, produce fine blooms, provided they fully appreciate that light, air, moderate waterings and a temperature of 40 to 50 degrees are most congenial.

When shall we begin propagating? This depends upon the varieties to be grown. All kinds requiring early or crown buds—say the first week of August—to produce double flowers, should be inserted in the propagating beds by the middle of the present month. The varieties referred to are Alice Lemon, Bob Pulling, C. H. Totty, Cheltoni, F. S. Vallis, Hon. Mrs. Lopes, James Fraser, Morristown, Mrs. Gilbert Drabble, Mrs. H. J. Jones, Mrs. James Gibson, Mrs. R. C. Pulling, Mrs. R. H. Boggs, Pockett's Crimson, Wm. Rigby, W. Woodmason and some others. All of these should be disbudded on or a few days before August 10. Then there are many which give better blooms from buds selected between August 10 and August 20, and cuttings from these should be in the sand by approximately March 1. The remainder of the exhibition sorts give smoother and better blooms from buds reserved August 25 to September 5. These should be inserted about March 15, and would include such varieties as Adonis, Calumet, Daily Mail, Elberon, Lady Hopetoun, Mankato, Mrs. Paul Moore, Nakota, Nerissa, Ogontz, Odessa, Reginald Vallis, Silver King, Wm. Turner, Yellow Turner, and possibly others.

Growing Them in Pots.

Chrysanthemums root so easily it seems scarcely necessary to go into detail, unless it is to guard against the use of too strong bottom heat. They are much slower in making roots when no heat is given underneath, but are better, as this course does not draw or weaken them.

Before the cuttings are rooted, soil for potting must be provided, and for this, do not make it extra rich, but of a friable nature. Avoid heavy compost, as this retards the roots from reaching the side of the pots. As soon as the small plants show the roots are beginning to crowd, they should be repotted into the 4-inch size, and if they are to be flowered in pots—which is accepted as giving the best results—this operation will have to be repeated until they receive the final potting, which is usually into 8-inch pots. Here I wish to say, some of the finest flowers I saw at Philadelphia last fall were flowered in 6-inch pots.

For each subsequent repotting, that is, from the smallest to the largest pots, slightly richer and coarser soil should be used. There are conflicting opinions regarding the amount of manure or other material to be incorporated, but we prefer to be moderate in this matter, inasmuch as the feeding with liquids begins as soon as the final pots are filled with roots, and these repeated applications furnish about all they can properly assimilate.

Growing Them in Benches.

Before going further, let us go back to the plants in 4-inch pots. There are many who cannot conveniently adopt the pot system, and so must resort to the commercial method of benching. When the 4-inch pots begin to fill with roots, it is time the mums should be planted, and the soil should be the same as for final potting—somewhat coarse, with plenty of fiber from the half decomposed sod, and to insure good, strong plants, they should not be planted nearer than twelve inches apart each way.

We are aware of the importance of keeping the plants free of insects of all kinds, but I take it for granted you are familiar with the methods necessary for their destruction. However, should anyone present desire advice for exterminating aphis, thrips, leaf-tiers and the chrysanthemum midge, or gallfly, I will glady give my experience at the conclusion.

Doubtless you are all familiar with the methods of staking and tying, so I will not take up your time with a discussion of these operations.

Discretion in Feeding.

The chrysanthemum, when in a healthy, growing condition, is about ninety per cent water; hence it will be seen they should have a liberal supply, and when the soil is of such a nature as to afford perfect drainage and the roots are in good condition it is almost impossible to overwater, especially in hot weather. The best index for this operation is the appearance of the plants, and so long as they are bright green, showing no signs of yellow foliage, it is safe to conclude the amount being applied is in accordance with their needs, but at the first indication of yellow leaves the supply should be curtailed, giving water only when the plants show dryness, and even then with discretion.

Assuming our pots or benches are well filled with roots, let us consider how we should nourish our plants. We are all aware that the chrysanthemum is a gross feeder and yet we realize this can be overdone. It is not of so great importance what kind of material we use in supplying nutriment, as is the knowledge to use what we have at our disposal to the best advantage, provided, of course, it is a well balanced food; that is to say, it contains the three important elements, namely, nitrogen, potash and phosphoric acid. It is rational to confine our acts within certain limits when dealing with plants, the same as are applied in promoting health in animal life.

Superabundance of nutrition is not usually manifest until a breakdown occurs, or until the change is so radical as to cause apprehension. It is easy to overdo; in fact, it is difficult to let well enough alone, when ardent desires to excel pervade the minds of all devoted growers. With this in mind, let us be careful, and whatever we apply, see to it that it is sufficiently diluted, as it is much safer to give nourishment at shorter intervals, if they appear in need, than to give too much at one time, particularly during the period of growth.

The rankest growing plants do not usually produce the most perfect blooms. Our object should be a good, healthy growth, with firm wood and with foliage that is tough and leathery, rather than brittle. Soft growth is to be guarded against, as they must have well ripened wood to receive the maximum benefit. Our products are not wrought mechanically; hence we cannot turn them out to any exact size by a precise rule. The only index we have is the plants' appearance, so that our knowledge of their requirements is only gained by close observation through years of experience and such experience cannot be imparted literally to others, but must be gained by diligence.

Effects of Climatic Conditions.

The quality of the 1917 crops is veiled with uncertainty. They may surpass those of former years, or be inferior to those of the last season. Climatic conditions have wonderful effects, and the grower may not fully realize the consequences when the weather is unusual and severe—be it drought, rain, heat or cold. These conditions, either favorable or adverse, we must accept as nature dictates, if not to our liking. At best, we can do no more than to try to modify them, as far as possible, by considering the relation of temperature, air and moisture to the radical state confronting us. It is not simply because it is the month of August that our plants produce buds, but the budding is also due to the change which takes place in them, contingent with the condition of the atmosphere. Cool nights early in the season are conducive to early buds, and the reverse to late maturity, or buds.

No allusion has been made to specimen plants, inasmuch as most growers do not attempt this specific branch of chrysanthemum culture. Those who are interested, and who are members of the Chrysanthemum Society of America, will find in the 1914 report an exhaustive paper on this subject by J. Canning.

Where Bench Space Is Limited.

There may be some of you who would like to take a hand in growing exhibition blooms, either for the coming show or for window displays, and have only limited space to devote. To such, I would recommend the varieties that perfect good blooms from the later buds; for example, such kinds as Odessa, Elberon, Adonis, Calumet, Nerissa, Nakota, Wm. Turner and its yellow sport. These will all come good from buds selected August 25 to September 5, producing a much higher percentage of perfect flowers than it is possible to grow from kinds requiring buds August 1, and the undertaking is less hazardous and perplexing.

In conclusion I wish it understood that these deductions, especially those referring to dates of buds, are intended for the middle west, and in no way are applicable to those located at a high altitude, or on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, where conditions are nearer normal than with us. Buds may appear in Cleveland earlier than 200 miles distant, depending upon the conditions existing where they are grown.

In thanking you for your attention, I extend to those who take up this interesting feature of chrysanthemum culture my desire that the fullest reward be yours, and the results of 1917 surpass your fondest hopes.

SEASONABLE NOTES.

Care of Cattleyas.

During the cold winter months it should be possible to find time to look over many of the cattleya plants and sponge them with a good insecticide, such as fir tree oil, Aphine or some reliable soap spray. Use a stiff brush to clean out scale which may be lurking near the base of old flower sheaths. A sponging makes the plants look much more presentable, but, if time will not permit this, use a force pump and spray the plants which are not in flower or bud with an insecticide, being sure to use a nozzle which throws a fine, misty spray. Cypripediums have less tough leaves than cattleyas and sponging is recommended for them.

If Cattleya labiata has not yet been potted over, lose no time in overhauling the plants. It is too late once the roots are being freely produced. Early plants of C. Trianæ can also be repotted or resurfaced now, taking the later flowering plants as time will permit. C. Percivaliana should be repotted at once. Of course only a certain proportion will need potting, but any with roots and growths hanging over the sides of the pots or baskets need attention. Some growers think it a mighty fine thing to see roots hanging over the sides of cattleya pots. As a matter of fact, it is just the reverse. If the roots are not in the compost, where they can get some food, the growths are sure to be weak and puny.

Compost for Repotting.

Good fern fiber, with the finer particles shaken out, is the best compost for cattleyas. Cut it up in square pieces and when potting be sure to firm the plants thoroughly. No loosely potted cattleyas, or, for that matter, any other orchids, will thrive. Use ample drainage in all pots. For this purpose coarse pieces of fern fiber will answer almost as well as crocks. I have used oyster shells for cattleyas. There may be a little food in them; at all events, the cattleya roots fasten themselves upon them in great shape.

We shall still have a good deal of cold, dark weather and watering must be carefully done. Particularly is this true of newly potted stock. An occasional light spraying on clear days will be found helpful, however, and will provide the plants with about all needed moisture. At this season our plants are watered once in five or six days on the average. It is safer to run them on the dry side rather than the reverse. Use liquid manure sparingly at this season. It does no harm to give occasional weak doses to plants in active growth, but caution is necessary at this season.

Shade and Temperature.

Cattleyas need little or no shade in midwinter. A good sunning is a benefit to them. Never mind if it temporarily turns the foliage a trifle yellow; it will make them break more strongly. As February advances, the sun will at times become quite strong and a light shading will become necessary. Happy are those who can afford movable lath shading. It is the ideal shade for orchids. They can then have all possible light in dark weather.

Do not try to run a high night temperature. I would much rather have the cattleya house at 50 degrees than 60 degrees on cold mornings, and 55 degrees is sufficient as a minimum on milder nights. Even on extremely cold days some top ventilation can be given for a few hours, and where ventilation is provided below the side stages a little can be left on during mild nights, even in midwinter. Do not coddle cattleyas, or they will resent it. They like plenty of fresh air, and conditions favorable to the growth of dendrobiums, calanthes, cypripediums and phalænopsis are far from congenial to cattleyas.

OBITUARY

John H. Getzinger.

J. H. Getzinger, a well known department manager of the Scottwood Greenhouses, Toledo, O., passed away January 24. Mr. Getzinger was in the employ of the Scottwood Greenhouses for twenty years and during the last ten years superintended the decorative work of this concern. His zeal and untiring efforts early gained for him a reputation as one of the most artistic and versatile decorators in the city. The decedent is survived by his wife, two brothers and several sisters. G. B. S.

Joe Browne, owner of the Lischey Nursery & Greenhouses, died recently at his home on Mile End avenue, Nashville, Tenn., in his fifty-first year. Mr. Browne, who was a Negro, was associated with the original owner of the Lischey establishment, who willed it to him at his death, and was respected by all who knew him.

Archie H. McMillan, of the McMillan Seed Co., Atlanta, Ga., died January 30 at a private hospital. He was 44 years of age and is survived by a widow, his mother, three brothers and four sisters.

LIMITATIONS OF THE HORSE.

It is generally recognized that there is no other line of business in which motor delivery has been so generally adopted as is the case with florists—and yet many florists will be interested in the limitations of equine delivery service as stated by H. B. Larzelere, of Philadelphia, general manager for the Vim Motor Truck Co. Mr. Larzelere says:

"Delivery experts have, by actual test, proven that the average merchant's problem is that of economically handling loads varying in weight from a few hundred to 1,000 pounds. At first sight, horse-drawn vehicles present the ideal means for transporting such light loads, but when you consider the fact that a horse's endurance is limited to only twenty miles a day, and at the best he can travel only five miles an hour, to make no mention of necessary stops and starts in delivery work, one can readily see that the cost of such delivery must be excessive. Then there are the stable charges, feed, harness and wagon repair, veterinary charges and many other little incidentals that are rarely considered. In the aggregate, all these count and present a delivery charge which is prohibitive.

"Motorized delivery is the ideal solution of the problem; but the average merchant's failing is his inability to buy a truck adapted to his particular needs. Many merchants turn to the converted pleasure car as an avenue of relief, but time has proven the downfall of such a method. No car, designed to joy-ride 800 pounds of passengers in high gear, can successfully withstand the severe strains of delivery service. Sudden starts and stops, jars and jolts of dead-weight loads soon tell on such vehicles and the replacement and repair charges, not to mention in many instances excessive gasoline and oil consumption, again create a delivery charge that is almost unbelievable."

The Market.

The last two or three weeks have seen a shortage in some kinds of cut flowers. Even carnations are short, but their quality is excellent. The larger part of the azalea shipments reached this city absolutely ruined, so there also is a shortage in pot plants. Golden Spurs and hyacinths are coming to the rescue in a measure, and cyclamens are in good supply and more popular than ever.

Indications point to the use of fewer bulbs next year than ever before in the history of the trade here and to the placing of more reliance on plants that can be grown at home. Cyclamen seeds have been produced by some of the growers here for several years and there are no better strains anywhere. A determined effort is being made to be independent of European sources of supply. In the end this will mean the use of a larger line of plants and cut flowers, and result in better business.

Sweet peas now are plentiful, but the dark days of the last two weeks were no help to them. Lilies continue plentiful.

Various Notes.

Miss Marion Joy, daughter of the late T. C. Joy and a younger sister of the present members of the firm, has been operated on for appendicitis. She was able to return to her home last week.

Daniel McIntyre is enjoying a decided improvement in health. He seems to have taken a new lease on life.

Geny Bros. are offering a nice line of azaleas. Their main shipments were totally ruined.

C. H. Tritschler is propagating bedding plants heavily. He also is gradually developing the cut flower end of the business.

Mrs. M. Bralliar sustained a serious fracture of the forearm and wrist in a fall on the icy road recently. She is making a rapid recovery.

The Joy Floral Co. has a contract for landscaping the grounds of the Golf and Country Club of this city. Several hundreds of shrubs, bedding plants, etc., are being used. F. B.

MOTT-LY MUSINGS

Dana R. Herron, of Olean, N. Y., is of the opinion that carnations, to be satisfactory, must be grown from cuttings taken from plants grown especially for that purpose. "It stands to reason," said Mr. Herron, "that cuttings taken from blooming plants have not the requisite vitality to withstand the demands made upon them. We reserve four benches entirely for cuttings and attribute our heavy crops and the sturdy growth to that fact. Carnations had a hard time last summer; first the excessive rains, then the drought—small wonder the plants have made such slow headway. Those Belle Washburn carnations, for instance, were planted out of 3-inch pots and were smaller when they were lifted to the bench. One-half the complaints we hear are that the cuttings lack the necessary stamina and, in addition, are raised under too much shade. The less shade the better, we believe; we do not shade ours at all." The rose crops have more than made up for the deficiency. Hadley is especially fine. Some 50,000 geraniums are most promising. Store Manager M. Oppenheim says that Snapdragon Keystone is highly popular, and as it now is here it certainly is a gem.

"It was the best year in the history of the establishment," responded Charles Cotter, of the Lakeview Rose Gardens, of Jamestown, N. Y., to my inquiry of "How's business?" It was interesting to trace the steady advance of business to the climax of the year just ended, the more gratifying when one considers the difficulty under which the stock is grown. At this time a batch of about 60,000 geraniums in 2½-inch pots is interesting. These were potted as the cuttings were taken from the stock plants. The percentage of loss is trifling. Soon the final shift into 3½-inch pots will take place. Becoming reminiscent, our good confrere traced the profession back to the period when Sargon, the first king of Babylon, was called a gardener-king, 6,000 years ago! Our old friend, Lawrence Cotter, is extremely ill.

George H. Heelas, of Jamestown, points with pride to the first dollar taken in. It is framed and suspended over the cash register. "At one time it looked as though we should need it," remarked our hustling confrere, "but we cleared the rapids and now it is smooth sailing in comparison. The favorite rose with us is Francis Scott Key."

The business conducted for thirty years by Daniel Offerle, at Warren, Pa., has passed to a younger son, Victor, who is remodeling the range and bringing it up to date. R. Offerle has launched out on his own account just across the river at Warren. He has built new houses and intends to expand as the business permits. He is adding a delivery auto. Both men have had good experience and undoubtedly will succeed.

G. L. Graham, of Bradford, Pa., was threatened with pneumonia. Mrs. Graham had charge of the business and said that they never had a better season than the present one. There is a general shortage of stock, both in cut flowers and blooming plants. Much of the imported stock arrived in a damaged condition.

S. F. Stephens & Son, of Columbus, O., are proud of the new house finished in time for fall business. I found the junior member busily engaged in lining graves. Quoting the "old sexton," he remarked: "We gather them in; the bulk of our work is right here. By pleasing our patrons and trying local advertising, we have increased this season's business seventeen per cent."

RESULTS.
We give them. You get them.
We both have them.

IT is fair to say that Matchless and Mrs. Ward, originated in the same establishment, have proved as hard to beat as any two carnations ever put on the market.

SOME of the introducers of novelties are not finding dissemination as easy as they expected. Nowadays it makes a difference whose recommendation a novelty bears.

THE trade has had a bad week. It has been severely cold over the greater part of the country, curtailing the use of flowers and adding materially to the work and expense necessary to keep the frost out.

THE principal growth of the trade at present is in the country towns, where large numbers of those engaged in other lines are taking up floriculture. In most cases the beginners make their start without glass, but greenhouses are only a question of time.

IT is said that certain Holland travelers are much discouraged with the results of their canvass to date. While the growers out in the country are placing orders much as usual at open prices, those in touch with the cities are said to be deterred by the disinclination of the salesmen to name any but higher prices.

WILLIAM GRAY, of Newport, R. I., secretary of the American Sweet Pea Society, sends out a list of premiums offered for the ninth exhibition of that society, to be held at Boston July 7 and 8. Eighteen special premiums have been offered by trade concerns. The complete schedule will be issued March 1 and is expected to contain a number of others.

WHAT CIRCULATION DOES.

The paper required to print a regular edition of The Review now costs $775, but out of this sum 12,500 copies come, and out of the 12,500 copies this is what the advertisers get:

Four insertions of my classified ad sold over 78,000 bulbs, which is going some.—H. E. Meader, Dover, N. H., January 22, 1917.

One insertion of the ad in The Review cleaned up our surplus.—Tarentum Floral Co., Tarentum, Pa., January 20, 1917.

The ads in The Review have brought us immediate results.—Harglerode Bros., Shippensburg, Pa., January 20, 1917.

Please cancel my ad immediately, as I have received orders for over 80,000 plants on the ad and cannot fill them all.—G. C. Tillinghast, Springfield, O., January 17, 1917.

Please discontinue the ad, as we have enough orders booked to use up all our stock.—James Culbert, Rossville, Ill., January 22, 1917.

When you hear a man complain of the cost of advertising you can be pretty sure he spends a good bit of money elsewhere than in The Review.

PITY THE POOR PLANTSMAN.

"If we have 'em ready to ship before we advertise, when the orders have come and the plants gone out we get a kick because they're potbound," said a specialist in young stock, "but if we try to get the orders ahead, to be filled when the stock is ready, then the feller gets all het up for fear we've stole his cash."

'Tis true. Pity the poor plantsman! But why doesn't the plantsman come up to date on his business methods? Why doesn't he state in his ads when the stock will be ready to ship? Why doesn't he have a postal printed that will make it possible to acknowledge each order by filling in a blank or two, and to state when and how shipment will be made? Why doesn't he tabulate his orders, so he will know when a batch of cuttings is sold out? If he finds he must wait for the next lot of stock to fill later orders, why doesn't he notify the man who orders and so save a kick? If he finds he can't ship according to promise, why doesn't he send a pleasantly worded postal to the effect that in the effort to supply only good stock shipment planned for blank date will be delayed to such another day?

In other lines of business exact and definite methods—systems—have been found to pay and pay well. Is there any reason why they would not pay a plantsman?

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

Department of Registration.

The Conard & Jones Co., of West Grove, Pa., submits for registration the cannas described below. Any person objecting to the registration or to the use of the proposed names is requested to communicate with the secretary at once. Failing to receive objections to the registration, the same will be made three weeks from this date.

Aurora (Wintzer's)—Green foliage; plants five feet high; good habit; large cluster of flowers of a brilliant scarlet; petals broadly edged with pure yellow.

Snow Queen—Flowers six inches across, of crystal whiteness, revealing faint opalescent flashes of fairy pink spots; the general effect is distinctly white; petals are two and one-half inches broad and of firm texture; foliage is green and the plant about four feet in height.

Druid Hill—Dark stems and deep red flowers; foliage nearly like Black Beauty; of unusual grace and effectiveness; high, well-poised heads of average sized flowers; color combination unmatched.

Morning Glow—A most picturesque color contrast; foliage olive-green, striped and veined with bronze; flowers an exquisite soft shell-pink, with orange-red center.

John Young, Sec'y.

SPEAKING OF HARDSHIPS—

Speaking of florists' hardships in general and particular, Louis B. Westholder arises to say that, for pure diabolicalness, the Wyoming brand of adversity surely ought to take first prize. Mr. Westholder conducts—when he is not snowed under—stores at Evanston and Rock Springs, Wyo., and does a large agency business in towns along the Union Pacific right of way. Old Boreas has been working overtime out in Wyoming and—but here are extracts from Mr. Westholder's epistle:

"The landscape from my store window consists principally of a snow mountain, in the street, which ends in a pinnacle six feet above the entrance to my store. The cheerfulness of this scene is heightened by the knowledge that $150 worth of flowers in transit are a total loss to me. I supply many towns with flowers, but to get shipments through would be like trying to move the aforesaid snow mountain. Thirty-four passenger trains of the Union Pacific are tied up between Evanston and Laramie; some are snowed under and 1,000 miners have been employed to tunnel the coaches out of the 'beautiful' snow.

"Growers are having difficulty in procuring coal—neither love nor money can budge the coal barons—and cut flower crops are at a standstill. Last, but not least, last week's issue of The Review is still somewhere in snowdom.

"But every cloud has a silver lining, and it is consoling to know that business during December and January was thirty-three and one-third per cent higher than that of the same two months a year ago. Last week I made a casket blanket of 750 roses, carnations and violets. The only difficulty was in making a delivery without freezing the stock, for the finger of the recording devil outdoors was at 35 below."

CHICAGO.

The Market.

The extreme cold weather of last week made city trade slow and the wholesalers who are dependent mostly upon city business complain that the week has been extremely dull. Shipping trade, on the other hand, has been good, so that those who cater to this branch of the business had little difficulty in moving stock and good average prices were obtained. The end of the week the market cleaned out fairly well, with the possible exception of sweet peas, which, because of the cold, were found hard to move.

American Beauties are still extremely scarce and high prices are obtaining. The market on roses loosened up considerably last week. Roses are again beginning to come in crop and the supply is accordingly steadily increasing. Carnations are plentiful, but move well and are bringing fair prices. Carnations have not been bringing the prices they should this season; only at one time and that at the beginning of the season were they in strong demand and then nobody had a supply to meet the requirements, so that growers generally are greatly dissatisfied.

Easter lilies are not plentiful, and those that reach the market sell well at a good price. Callas also are in light supply; in fact, there were not nearly so many grown this year as in former years. They sell well, however, and good prices are being obtained. The supply of violets is not large and they are moving well. Sweet peas arrive in large supply, but because of the cold weather they have been dragging considerably. Paper whites are quite plentiful and are selling fairly well. Good tulips sell readily at a fair price. Poor stock, however, is found difficult to move. Freesias arrive in ample supply, but are not selling as well as they should. Daisies are arriving in larger quantities and are selling fairly well. A little stevia may still be found on the market. Snapdragons are still slow in arriving; what stock comes in, however, sells well. The supply of jonquils is not large, but sufficient to fill the demand.

January Weather.

The cold wave that marked the advent of February was hard on the growers, increasing the already high fuel bill and causing much extra work, but January was a favorable month for production. Temperature, snowfall and wind movement were about normal, but of sun, the most important factor, there was sixty-four per cent of the possible amount. Usually in January Chicago gets only forty-two per cent of the possible number of hours of sun, so this year gave fifty per cent more than normal sun.

Fuel Famine Feared.

Warnings of a new coal shortage in Chicago were sent out February 6, as a result of an embargo by all eastern railroads on the movement of coal westward from Pennsylvania and West Virginia. This shuts off, for an indefinite time, the supply of Pocahontas coal on which many local growers depend.

A Reunion.

One of those pretty, always-summery post cards has come to The Review in the zero weather, inscribed "Greetings from Los Angeles," and bearing the well-known signatures of H. N. Bruns, E. C. Amling, A. Ringier, Fred Sperry, H. R. Richards and Harold Amling, all Chicagoans or former Chicagoans. Evidently something in the nature of a reunion was in progress.

Various Notes.

Secretary A. J. Zech announces that the good-of-the-club committee has designated as publicity night the meeting of the Florists' Club for February 8 and has arranged an extraordinary program. Ella Grant Wilson, of Cleveland, will speak on coöperative publicity and J. H. Burdett will talk on the possibility of making new flower buyers by publicity. The publicity committee will give a preliminary report on the national campaign of advertising started at the last meeting and which is proving successful.

Wells-Fargo has been making pick-ups, during the zero days, with a frost-proof closed wagon, the body heavily padded, sides, top and bottom, heated by lanterns. Equal care at Christmas would have saved a vast amount of trouble.

Milady still holds first place among red roses in the estimation of Wendland & Keimel Co., Elmhurst. It was because of the difficulty of obtaining grafted plants of Milady that it was decided to produce their own young stock this year, for something like 10,000 Milady plants are needed for spring benching. A few thousand of Killarney Brilliant also will be grafted.

Joseph Ziska & Sons moved to their new home at 169 to 175 North Wabash avenue February 3. Their new location affords them a floor space 60x125 for their show rooms, wire shop and office. The room has a ceiling sixteen and one-half feet high. Among other conveniences for customers there will be a rest room with table and chairs and a file of The Review. On the opening day Archie Spencer presented the firm with a large horseshoe floral design made up of red carnations, boxwood and plumosus, carrying a message of good will.

The E. C. Amling Co. has made an arrangement with the E. G. Hill Co.,

to the city last week, left for Minneapolis February 3, to join his wife, who is ill.

While skating on the lake off Rogers Park last week with a party of boy friends, Ronald Smith, 14-year-old cousin of A. H. Smith, of the Leonard Seed Co., heard a cry behind him. He turned about quickly to see one of his friends disappear in the icy water. Without a moment's hesitation he rushed to his comrade's assistance, jumped into the water after him without even stopping to remove his skates and was about to save him when the terrified lad grasped him around the neck and drew him down with him. After a fight to free himself, young Smith, almost frozen numb, was obliged to save himself by getting out of the water. His friend was drowned.

The Market.

It is indeed gratifying to see the large orders for funeral work come pouring in, for the cold weather of last week kept the transient trade quiet. The demand for funeral flowers has been so heavy that it had the forces of several stores working almost day and night. Should the call for flowers for other purposes become heavier, the stores would take on a holiday aspect, with its attendant rush and hurry.

We are glad to note that some of the more progressive florists have increased the price of carnations to $1 per dozen, from 75 cents, which was the price in vogue at this time last year. In view of the higher cost of all supplies used by florists, we think this price is necessary in order to "live and let live." In sharp contrast one or two men are offering pickled stock at the ridiculous price of 25 cents per dozen.

Some splendid single violets are seen, as well as mignonette of extra high quality. In roses Ophelia, Killarney and Russell at present are in public favor, the prices ranging from $1.50 to $4 per dozen. A few Rainbow freesias are in the market and, considering the size of the flowers and length of the stems, they are well worth the price of the bulbs, $4 per hundred. Sweet peas are increasing in supply and the quality is the highest ever seen here. The demand for peas is always steady. A scant supply of lilies is quickly used in funeral work, at the usual price of $3 per dozen.

Pot plants this year are enjoying greater popularity than at any former time. Cyclamens, primulas and tulips now always have a ready sale, which certainly could not have been said of them in former years.

Various Notes.

The E. G. Reimers Co. suffered a slight loss from freezing, as also did John Bohrman. It was impossible to keep the temperature up during such extremely cold weather.

A visit to the Kirch Greenery, as Louis Kirch has appropriately named his establishment, found things in excellent shape. The crop of plumosus and Sprengeri made an excellent showing. Mr. Kirch believes in making two blades grow where only one grew before; accordingly, he has planted sweet peas among the young greens and is cutting some excellent flowers. A unique geranium plant, 10 years old, furnished 600 cuttings at one time. These were in the sand when the writer called.

A visitor to the greenhouses of the E. G. Reimers Co. will indeed be impressed by the spick-and-span appearance of the place and the splendid condition of all the stock grown there. Milton Reimers, who is in charge, took the course in horticulture at the State University and from there went to the Wilcox & Sons range at Council Bluffs, Ia. A bench of Nebraska coming into crop was a sight. There were flowers four inches in diameter on 3-foot stems that were straight and stiff as ramrods. These flowers have sold regularly at $1.50 per dozen and a number of orders have been taken for cuttings. We think it is a fitting answer to the question, "Do novelties pay?"

A batch of 1,000 carnation cuttings, just ready to be taken out, was noted at the F. Walker Co. houses. This firm intends to increase its planting of this flower next season.

The Market.

Just as the market was showing signs of easing up somewhat, another cold wave came along, checked the stock and caused the market to become tighter than it was a fortnight ago.

Roses still are on the short side of the market. The same is true of carnations. Easter lilies meet with a ready sale. Bulbous stock is more plentiful and is proving good property. Sweet peas sell well. Valley, violets and orchids are in fair supply but meet with an ordinary demand, having competition in good primroses, callas, rubrum lilies, baby roses, snapdragons and forget-me-nots. Greens are plentiful.

Various Notes.

The regular meeting of the Cincinnati Florists' Society will be held Monday, February 12, at Hotel Gibson.

C. E. Critchell, February 3, entertained Mr. and Mrs. Herman Knoble, of Cleveland, and Mr. and Mrs. William Nicholson, of Boston, at his home in Rose Hill. Mr. Critchell regrets that the weather was so inclement that he was unable to drive around and show his guests some of the beautiful places and scenes in and about this city.

The William Murphy Co. last week got in its first Dutch hyacinth stock of the year. This item sold readily.

St. Valentine's Day Suggestions

The call for this particular day seems to be largely for Spring Flowers and other small stock which make up an attractive cut flower box. We would suggest the following items to you:

CARNATIONS

The supply is increasing, and we believe we can take care of all orders very nicely. We have never offered you better Carnations than we have now. We say they are the best, and you can depend on it that you are getting high-grade stock, mostly the newer varieties, of the best keeping quality.

Valley Lilac Cattleyas
Tulips Daisies Gardenias
Freesias Primulas Mignonette
Daffodils Pussy Willow Calendulas
Sweetheart Roses Snapdragon Cornflowers
Single and Double Violets White and Yellow Daisies

It would be quite in order for you to provide for a sufficient quantity of cut flowers to meet the demand. The most essential point for a satisfactory and profitable business for St. Valentine's Day is that you provide for an ample supply and be prepared for the extra business that is sure to come.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

Two exceedingly severe cold waves, following closely one after the other, have checked business in cut flowers and in plants. It is a curious fact that, seriously as these cold waves affect the development of stock in the greenhouses, they affect sales much more. People do not shop in a near-zero temperature unless it is absolutely necessary. There are some parties, but little transient trade. The result is a decided dullness, with little change in prices, as receipts are light. It is unfortunate that many shipments of flowers arrived frozen, owing to insufficient protection. Some could be sold at low prices when thawed out; others were useless.

Carnations have fallen in price; so also have daffodils and tulips. Roses remain unchanged. The supply still is light. The first Acacia pubescens has arrived. Lilacs and freesias are plentiful and good. Valley and sweet peas sell well. Yellow narcissi are neglected now that daffodils can be obtained readily. Greens are quite scarce.

Rose Show Work.

A meeting of the executive committee of the American Rose Society was held in the Bellevue-Stratford hotel, February 1. Progress has been made by all the committees in the work of preparation for the show that will open March 20 in the First Regiment armory. The committee on decorations, John P. Habermehl, chairman, now has its plans well matured. The central rose garden has been agreed upon. Many of the plants have been engaged and the general decorations for the hall are planned. A most encouraging sign is that the retail florists will support this show with exhibits that will be worthy of their skill. The membership tickets are being sent out now, in order that all members will know the time and place and will interest their friends in the exhibition.

Club Meeting.

A large audience greeted Max Schling, of New York, at the club meeting February 6. Mr. Schling talked on advertising and his hearers grew enthusiastic when he told of delivering flowers anywhere in the United States in two hours.

The carnation exhibits included Belle Washburn and Miss Theo, from W. F. Evans; a pink sport, from A. F. Le Fevre, and Cornell, from S. S. Pennock-Meehan Co. The roses included September Morn, from the Florex Gardens, and Gem, from Edward Towill.

Bowling.

The games committee of the Florists' Club has started a bowling tournament on the clubroom alleys. Six teams of five men each have entered. Each team rolls one match of three games with each of the other teams.

The Shop Windows.

A daring window—one that suggests that the artist who arranged it meant to compel attention, a window that it is difficult to pass without stopping, a window that repays study—such is the window of William Berger's Sons.

The floor is of white, so pure that the white trellis in the background looks creamy by comparison. On this dazzlingly white floor are vases of flowers that present strong contrasts. Each vase is generously filled and given ample display room. A blue vase is filled with freesias and cornflowers; the freesias tall and graceful, the cornflowers short, just clear of the vase that they match well. Nearby is another vase in which white predominates. It is nearly filled with Easter lilies save for a cluster of the orange Calendula grandiflora. At one side a bunch of white daisies in a green bowl and a shapely bowl full of Golden Spur daffodils and Paper White narcissi complete the suggestion of spring. A vase containing just two specimen Ophelia roses in the background gives a suggestion of early summer to this spring-like window.

Various Notes.

Miss Emily Exley commenced a series of six lectures at Eleventh and Locust streets February 6. There will be one lecture each Tuesday afternoon until March 13.

A meeting of the growers of geraniums and other bedding plants will be held at the office of Robert Craig Co., 4900 Market street, Saturday, February 10, at 2 p. m., to consider whether the price of spring plants should be advanced owing to the increased cost of production.

Alfred B. Cartledge, Jr., will open a retail store in Wilmington, Del., in a few days. Mr. Cartledge, who was formerly buyer for his father's firm, Pennock Bros., has many good wishes for his success.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

The Market.

Washington experienced its first really cold weather of the winter February 6, as much as 10 degrees below zero. Stock sold up closely last week, the prices remaining about the same as those of the week before. Usually there comes a drop at this time of the year, but the weather has been such, up to now, as to keep the figures quite high. Roses in all colors are scarce and it is a difficult matter to get any but culls at less than 8 cents. The bulk of the stock runs up to $15 per hundred, while some few specials bring $20 per hundred and higher. Carnations continue to bring $5 and $6 per hundred and are as scarce as reported the preceding week. Other stock is more plentiful.

Various Notes.

William F. Gude has again broken into the movies. With Mrs. Gude and George W. Hess he accompanied the committee on public buildings and grounds of the House of Representatives to Monticello, Va., where they viewed the home of Thomas Jefferson, which the government is about to acquire.

A. K. Hatki, of Ratcliffe & Tanner, Richmond, Va., and H. J. Anderson, of Cromwell, Conn., were among the visitors in Washington last week.

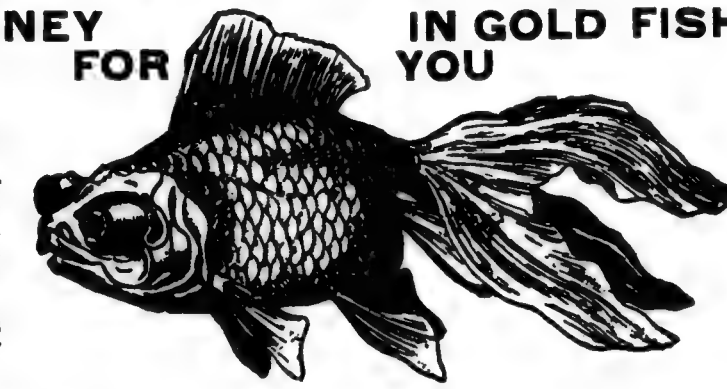
H. C. Thompson, horticulturist of the Bureau of Plant Industry, has returned from a trip to Cleveland, Columbus, Toledo and other towns in Ohio, for the purpose of securing data on the growing of vegetables under glass.

A delegation of women last week appeared before a House committee to urge the adoption of the mountain laurel as the national flower. William F. Gude, as national representative of the S. A. F., was given an opportunity to state the desires of florists. He stated that some time ago he had published a request for an expression of views from the florists throughout the country, and that among the answers he received there was only one proposing anything else.

J. H. Small, Jr., and William F. Gude, of Washington, and Isaac Moss, of Baltimore, were the experts called to testify as witnesses in the District Supreme court concerning the value of more than a half mile of hedge to be destroyed to permit street widening. The florists, declaring it to be a shame to cut down the beautiful trees and destroy the hedge, placed the value at between $15,000 and $20,000. C. L. L.

NEW YORK.

The Market.



Last week closed with a cold wave, war clouds and a blue Saturday. Monday morning the intense cold was accompanied by a blizzard, and the week opened rather discouragingly for all branches of the trade.

The cut flower market was steady last week and the average prices of last month prevailed. The scarcity of roses is still a reality and there has been no recession in values; any change during the present week is improbable. The receipts of high-grade American Beauties are light and as high as 75 cents each was asked for the selected blooms, with corresponding values for every grade. All other roses have held wonderfully, nothing under $4 per hundred having been quoted for the short-stemmed arrivals. Hadleys continue popular and the best of them bring 50 cents each. The other favorites are Ophelia, Sunburst, Hoosier Beauty, Prima Donna, Radiance, Mock, Killarney Brilliant and Shawyer.

Few carnations last week sold above $5 per hundred. The average quotations were $3 to $5, and at the high figure it was necessary to select the stock.

Quite a quantity of carnations sold at $2 to $3, but these were not up to an acceptable quality. Shipments of carnations and roses are increasing. The usual break apparently is anticipated after St. Valentine's day.

There now seems to be an abundance of orchids, and prices on these have declined, February 3 the best blooms being quoted at 40 cents. The oncidiums are as popular as ever for window decorations. The best gardenias last week sold at $3 per dozen. This grade is not overabundant. Lilies have been steady at $10 to $15 per hundred, the latter figure being for the long-stemmed and large-flowered Formosa blooms.

Valley does not go above $5 and some short, inferior sprays last week sold as low as $10 per thousand. Callas hold well at the high quotations, but the shipments are increasing.

There is an extra large supply of freesias. These are of splendid quality and are offered at most reasonable prices. Narcissi also are abundant, and of tulips there is no limit. The short-stemmed blooms are slow of sale. Violets were weak and offered by the street men during the mild spell, as usual. The cold wave, however, has stiffened values and the supply is not excessive. There is still a small supply of stevia. Sweet peas are abundant and the best Spencers bring encouraging prices to the growers. In the market are lilacs, pansies, mignonette, daisies, forget-me-nots, daffodils, calendulas, primulas, hyacinths and bouvardias.

February 12 the New York Florists' Club will meet at its rooms in the Grand Opera House building. At the present rate of increase in membership the club soon will need more commodious quarters. With the average attendance over 150 and a membership of nearly 500, space has become a serious consideration. March 17 the annual dinner of the Florists' Club takes place at the Biltmore. This date will be especially opportune for out-of-town florists attending the flower show. Vice-president Miller says he has some surprises for both occasions. dealers were not handling so much stock as they would had the weather been normal. The week was fairly satisfactory, however, despite adverse conditions, and the coal consumed at greenhouse ranges in this vicinity was something scandalous.

Roses are in fine shape and there is enough of the long, fancy stock to satisfy the demand. Shorter grades, however, are scarce and it is impossible to take care of all orders for this class of stock. Short Russell roses are especially hard to obtain, and Ophelia is a close second in this respect. Red roses are also particularly scarce and even standing orders on this color are not being taken care of in full.

portion of colors seems to have evened up to some extent and all orders are being taken care of satisfactorily. Sweet peas are in heavier supply and the cut is big enough to take care of the demand. Violets are coming along finely and the quantity of singles has increased sufficiently so that they can be sold in large lots.

Lilies are scarce and even the light demand is not being taken care of satisfactorily. There are plenty of short rubrums in the market and these are moving nicely. Valley, of course, is extremely scarce, and the supply includes but few first-quality sprays. Spring stock is coming in more heavily each day and is selling well. Daffodils are somewhat slow in arriving and are cleaned up easily.

A. Schiller, who has been confined to the hospital for some time, where he has undergone several operations, was operated on again February 3. He was too weak to take an anæsthetic, but it is reported that he is resting quietly and is suffering no ill effects. It will be some time before he again will be able to be about.

William Leverenz, who underwent a serious operation some time ago, is able to visit the store, but he cannot attend to business as yet. He is improving nicely and it will not be long before he will be in the harness again.

Among visitors last week were C. B. Knickman, of McHutchison & Co., New York, and J. J. Karins, of Henry A. Dreer, Inc., Philadelphia.

William R. Schroeder and N. Zweifel left Milwaukee January 30 to attend the carnation exhibition at Indianapolis.

The Market.

Graduations and an abundance of funeral work had the florists stepping lively last week. The call for flowers has exceeded the usual supply during the winter months. The severe weather has greatly hampered the daily consignments, delaying some of them for hours, and in some cases the flowers have been frozen.

Stock is none too plentiful at this time and prices are higher. There is a good supply of roses, principally of the better grades. Short-stemmed stock is out of the question; only small consignments arrive. Some fine Stanley, Maryland and Montrose roses are seen and are disposed of easily. The supply of carnations is not large, but the quality is fair. Prices range from $5 to $6 per hundred. Sweet peas are fairly plentiful, but only a few whites are seen. Jonquils are becoming more abundant and cheaper, and clear wonderfully well. Paper Whites are good and are used extensively in design work. Freesia is holding up well and sells easily. Violets are in large supply and move better this week at 50 cents per hundred. Orchids and gardenias have been plentiful and have sold well. Valley also is in adequate supply, but the demand is not large. Yellow daisies and mignonette arrive in good condition and sell well. Cut tulips move easily and Roman hyacinths find favor. Easter lilies and callas are not so abundant now. A large business has been done in potted hyacinths during the last week, some exceptionally good plants having arrived.

Various Notes.

Charles W. Crosman, of the Crosman Bros. Co., recently celebrated his seventieth birthday. He was the recipient of a basket of seventy Killarney roses, presented to him by a number of the old employees.

George Cramer has been busy of late on valentine novelties for Salter Bros.

Visitors to the trade last week included E. F. Kennon, of the Climax Mfg. Co., of Castorland, N. Y.; Julius Berg, of Lion & Co., New York; James Rogers, of Spencerport, N. Y.

Joseph Cann, of S. A. Anderson's, Buffalo, was in town last week to make up a large blanket and other pieces for the funeral of a prominent citizen.

David Scott, of Corfu, N. Y., is shipping in fine cut tulips, which he disposes of quickly.

H. E. Wilson had a good window for the week end consisting of a large valentine heart prettily arranged with an arrow and corsages of red roses. Business with Mr. Wilson has been exceptionally good.

I hear on good authority that the local florists are discussing the advantages of standard prices. Action probably will be taken at the next meeting of the Florists' Association.

FOR YOUR PROTECTION, MR. FLORIST,

ACCEPT "SUPERIORA" MAGNOLIA LEAVES ONLY

EXTRACTS FROM OUR ENDORSEMENTS

The Wm. Murphy Co., of Cincinnati, O., writes: "We find your 'Superiora' Magnolia Leaves the best product of the kind we have ever sold, and we take pleasure in congratulating you on same and recommending them to all in need of a first-class satisfactory leaf."

B. E. & J. T. Cokely, of Scranton, Pa., write: "We have always considered your Magnolia Leaves to be a standard for quality, etc."

The Baltimore Wholesale Florist and Supply Co., of Baltimore, Md., writes: "We are confident that any other manufactured Magnolia Leaves could not compete with yours, as other brands have been offered us, which, after we tried them, we refused to carry in stock."

N. F. McCarthy & Co., of Boston, Mass., write: ". . . It is the opinion of McCarthy & Co. that your good firm prepares the best leaf that has yet been offered in the United States. It is well worth the difference between the prices offered by inferior manufacturers and your agents."

Jos. Ziska & Sons, of Chicago, Ill., write: "We feel that you are entitled to a compliment on the good quality of your 'Superiora' brand Magnolia Leaves. We have handled these goods for a long time—in fact, we believe that we are one of the first handlers of your goods here in Chicago, and must say that we have as yet to get a return of your merchandise. Even buyers that were always accustomed to buying the foreign brands realize and admit that your leaves are far superior."

The Cleveland Florists' Exchange, Cleveland, O., says: ". . . never as yet have we had a complaint on the 'Superiora' brand of Magnolia Leaves, nor a carton returned."

Smith & Young Co., of Indianapolis, Ind., writes: "We will continue to use 'Superiora' exclusively as we consider it superior to any other leaf in the market. Since we handle 'Superiora' we have not had one single complaint, etc., etc."

The Leo Niessen Co., of Philadelphia, Pa., says: "To the best of our knowledge your leaves are of the best quality and as good as we can get in the market."

The Cleveland Cut Flower Co., of Cleveland, Ohio, writes: ". . . that we have been sending you orders for 'Superiora' brand Magnolia Leaves for several years should prove that we like your goods . . ."

The Dale Estate, of Brampton, Ont., writes: "We are glad to state that any 'Superiora' leaves that we have had in the past were always as reported and gave satisfaction in our business."

Geo. H. Angermueller, of St. Louis, Mo., says: "It pleases me to say that I have worked up a splendid business on your 'Superiora' Magnolia Leaves, and I credit my success to the fact that the quality of your leaves has always been entirely satisfactory to my customers, etc."

Oscar Leistner, of Chicago, Ill., writes: ". . . As you know, before you gave us the sole agency for the Western country, we were handling a different leaf, but these leaves gave us no end of trouble and our customers were very much disappointed with the quality. Since we have been handling your leaves we find that the complaints from our customers have entirely disappeared, and the trade seems anxious to buy your leaves exclusively. Only today one of our customers told us that he had bought 100 cartons of Magnolias from one of your competitors, but that he has been compelled to return them, as his customers absolutely refused to accept them, due to the fact that the leaves are 'off-color' as well as mouldy, etc."

New York Florists' Supply Co., of New York City, writes: "Since we have been handling your 'Superiora' Magnolia Leaves we have had no complaints about the quality, and can assure you that in our judgment they are fully up to the standard of the best imported."

C. E. Critchell, of Cincinnati, Ohio, writes: "My customers insist on having the 'Superiora' brand of Magnolias, as they claim these are the best, and that they do not dry out or become mouldy, and that every leaf can be used, and when this is taken into consideration, they are also the cheapest, besides being the best."

The McCallum Co., of Pittsburgh, Pa., says: "Other Magnolia preparers have tried to induce us to stock up their goods 'just as good as Dux's' at a cheaper price, but we have in each instance told them frankly that it was a case of quality with us, and that we did not think their leaf would give the satisfaction yours did. We consider our Magnolia trade one of the best assets of our business and will not take a chance of losing it; in fact, our traveling men are often greeted as 'Magnolia Kings.'"

L. Baumann & Co., of Chicago, Ill., write: "We regard your 'Superiora' Magnolia Leaves as being unequaled and certainly would not want to have anything else. Your leaves need no recommendation—they speak for themselves."

The Market.

Business has been satisfactory, funeral work continuing to be the mainstay of the activity in the stores. The demand for flowers for decorative purposes, however, has weakened markedly. After a 2-day shortage caused by a snow blockade, cut flower receipts now are easily adequate for requirements. Particularly fine blooms of Ophelia, Russell and Killarney head a plenteous supply of roses. The quotations start at $8 and then mount the scale that ends with Beauty's prices. Cecile Brunner and others of its type win popular favor at $2.50 and $3 per hundred. Easter lilies and callas meet with a lively call, and the figures on these are in line with the high-cost-of-living idea. Violets experience a good sale, 100 of the fragrant blooms bringing $1. Good flowering plants move easily.

The retailers are preparing novelties and clearing the decks for the St. Valentine boom, and it's going to be "some" boom, if great expectations come true.

In observance of McKinley day, the H. B. Whitted Floral Co. had a patriotic window display at its Fifth street store. An American flag artistically decorated with carnations formed the center of the window.

W. Hayden, of the Florist Shop, has had his domain redecorated and improved. Mr. Hayden does a splendid business and is well known for his artistic funeral pieces.

Topnotch tulips and jonquils now come under the knife at the Max Kaiser houses. E. M. P.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

The Market.

The sunless weather, with excessively cold spells, has been reflected in the general scarcity of flowers. Relief, however, is in sight, as daffodils, hyacinths and tulips are beginning to come along in increasing quantity. There has been no material decline in the prices of roses and carnations. Sweet peas are coming into market in larger quantities and are of better quality.

Various Notes.

At the annual meeting of the New England Nurserymen's Association, held at New Haven, Conn., last week, D. A. Clarke, of Fiskeville, was elected secretary.

Maxwell Villar, formerly with Johnston Bros., now is associated with Smith, the Florist, 25 Washington street.

W. H. M.

PITTSBURGH, PA.

The Market.

Pittsburgh last week had an old-fashioned blizzard. The temperature ranged from zero to 6 below, and a good part of the time there was a 40-mile wind blowing. There are no reports of anyone freezing out, but the coal piles have been greatly reduced, and that means money now.

Stock of most kinds has shortened, but the demand has decreased, as the inclement weather keeps the buyers at home.

Various Notes.

The Pittsburgh delegation has returned from the carnation convention at Indianapolis and each of the visitors is pleased both with the convention and with the entertainment while there.

Mr. Weber, of Oakland, Md., is a visitor in this city, but the cold weather has made it uncomfortable for him to go around much.

John Harris is the champion godfather of this city; he stands for a new baby every week. That is what it means to be popular!

The Florists' Club met February 6 and elected officers. Last year was a good one for the society. It had a steady growth, a number of new members having been elected at each meeting.

Clarke.

NEWARK, N. J.

The Market.

While there is a good variety of flowers in the market, stock generally is scarce and high. Each week sees a larger quantity of bulbous stock offered.

The volume of business done in this section is reported to be satisfactory. Some of the florists complain that they are unable to pass on to the purchaser all the higher prices of flowers. An unusually large number of deaths from pneumonia have resulted in much funeral work. Winter weddings also have added to the volume of business.

Various Notes.

Charles Luthy reports business good just now. The new store which he recently opened on Eighteenth avenue, near Springfield avenue, is attracting a satisfactory trade.

Connolly & Plunkett, who several months ago purchased the store at 20 Belmont avenue, from Joseph D. Kroehl, Jr., have acquired the store operated by Robert James. Mr. James is going back to his greenhouse business. The James store will be the headquarters hereafter, and the Belmont avenue store the branch. Business is reported good at both stores.

R. B. M.

NEWPORT, R. I.

The premium list for the June exhibition of flowers, to be held under the joint auspices of the Newport Horticultural Society and the Newport Garden Association, is out. Copies may be secured from Secretary Frederick P. Webber.

James Galvin is taking a respite from business on account of poor health.

V. A. Vanicek was elected treasurer of the New England Nurserymen's Association at the annual meeting at New Haven, Conn., last week.

The balance of the stock in the Galvin Nursery recently was purchased for use on the James estate.

W. H. M.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.

The Market.

School graduations last week called for more flowers than usual. Nearly all the florists had a generous share of the work. Roses and carnations were obtainable, but there were other flowers, too, such as violets, sweet peas, narcissi and orchids.

Weather conditions have not changed much, cold, dark days having prevailed most of the time. Prices are still high, except those of carnations, which receded a little during the last of the week.

Various Notes.

Harry Kranzler has left the employ of Ernest Chamberlain and gone into business in another line.

H. V. Sowle reports a heavy run of funeral work during the last week.

Edward M. Pierce is growing many snapdragons this year. Besides several benches, he has several thousands of the best 2¼-inch plants one would want to see. He finds a ready market for all he can produce.

S. E. Shaw is picking fine sweet peas. Mr. Shaw has grown more carnations this year than usual, but he declares the demand has exceeded the output throughout the winter.

Fred C. Covill is doing an ever-increasing business. He had many orders for the high school graduations. Carnations were the most popular sellers with him.

W. M. P.

Beckley, W. Va.—This is a city of 4,500 population without a florist, but Mrs. C. H. Blain is planning to supply the deficiency.

Scranton, Pa.—Ill health has made it necessary for Jonathan Rodham to retire from the business. He has leased his range to G. R. Clark.

Lake Forest, Ill.—"Insects and Bugs Injurious to Plant Life and Best Methods of Control," was the subject of an instructive lecture by Prof. D. K. McMillan, of Urbana, Ill., at last month's meeting of the North Shore Horticultural Society. The members of the society were guests of Thomas Head, at the estate of J. O. Armour. The meeting incidentally was a house warming of the new reading and recreation rooms built by Mr. Armour for the men employed on the estate.

The Market.

Wholesale market conditions last week were good. The extremely cold days retarded activities somewhat, but as a whole the business for the week was excellent, with prices not any too high. The weather during the first few days of the week was mild, but during the last three days the thermometer registered below zero. These conditions have checked trade considerably.

As to last week's supply of cut stock, the conditions remained the same as those of the week previous. Roses in all varieties were scarce and the few that did come in brought good prices. Beauties brought $6 per dozen for extra quality stock and the demand for these was excellent. Ophelias have the call in all roses and are of fine color. Choice stock brings $12 per hundred. Russells are scarce at present and the demand for Killarney far exceeds the supply. Anything in red sells well.

Carnations, too, have been in large demand and extra fancies brought $4 per hundred. A good crop of these is expected from now on. Violets at present are in heavy crop and sell at 40 cents for choice stock. St. Valentine's day will use many violets and the crop promises to be large for this day. Sweet peas are arriving in fine shape. Extra long, fancy butterfly peas bring $1.50 per hundred and common stock makes 35 cents per hundred. Good jonquils, tulips, freesias and valley are seen daily. There also is a good crop of Paper Whites. Callas and Easter lilies are scarce, with the demand good. All green goods have a big call—asparagus, galax, smilax, adiantum, flat ferns and wild smilax.

Various Notes.

Mr. Ground Hog, as usual, made his appearance February 2. He saw his shadow and returned to his home to remain six weeks longer. This is not to the liking of the county growers, who are testing the capacity of the boilers. The weather has been 10 degrees below zero since February 2. A few of the Kirkwood growers have reported losses from cold houses and several shipments have been bady frozen.

Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Windler spent a few days in Chicago on their return home from the carnation convention at Indianapolis. Mr. Windler's visit was in the interest of the St. Louis spring flower show, as head of the program committee.

Considerable interest is centered in the coming election of officers by the Retail Florists' Association. Each office has several candidates and it is expected that the contests will be spirited.

The St. Louis representatives at the American Carnation Society's meeting have returned home. They report a great show and are delighted with the hospitality of the Indianapolis florists.

The Market.

Cut flowers are becoming more plentiful. One or two mild days last week rushed bulbous flowers along and the acute shortage that has existed for some weeks seems to be over. We have been experiencing the severest weather of the winter, and this has not only checked production appreciably, but at the same time has hurt retail buying. Rose prices have softened somewhat, short-stemmed stock selling now at $4 to $5 per hundred against $6 to $8 per hundred a couple of weeks ago. There is no decided change in the better grades, but trade in them drags more than a week ago. Ophelia, Hadley, Russell, Killarney Brilliant and Stanley are popular leaders. Whites are inclined to be druggy. American Beauties are in fair supply and demand. Carnations are arriving more freely and prices have a downward tendency. The majority sell at $3 to $4 per hundred, with fancies a little higher. Violets are not abundant, but the demand is not specially robust. Sweet peas are now of grand quality. The Spencers are extra fine. Prices run all the way from 50 cents to $2, with a few specials at $2.50.

Bulbous flowers are more abundant and prices show a recession all around. Many varieties of tulips and narcissi are now arriving. Freesias still are abundant; so are Paper Whites and Romans. A few nice French irises are seen and command fancy prices. Snapdragons are not plentiful; the finest spikes make $2 to $2.50 per dozen. Marguerites are coming in somewhat more freely, also calendulas, forget-me-nots, wallflowers and mignonette. Lilies are overplentiful and lower in price. Pansies are now coming in well. Some extra fine flowers are noted. Prices now range from 75 cents to $3 per hundred.

Gardenias are abundant and much cheaper. The foliage is not perfect on most of the flowers seen, the flowers evidently having both the yellows and a fungoid disease on the foliage. The supply of valley is unchanged. The plant trade is now quite good. A fine assortment of bulbous plants is now available. Cyclamens are great sellers, also azaleas, Primula malacoides and genistas.

Massachusetts Horticultural Society.

There was a most interesting exhibition at Horticultural hall February 3. For six Primula Sinensis, William Thatcher, gardener to Mrs. J. L. Gardner, was first; A. M. Davenport, second. For six begonias, William Thatcher also led, with fine plants of Glory of Cincinnati. Thomas Roland received honorable mention for his new begonia, Flora Roland, of a most pleasing delicate pink color. E. H. Wetterlow had a fine group of Primula Sinensis. Alfred E. Parsons showed a beautiful deep pink form of Primula malacoides, just the color for retailers, and was awarded honorable mention. William Thatcher had well flowered plants of Senecio Petasitis and Aphelandra aurantiaca Rœzlii. George Melvin had a beautifully flowered specimen of Dendrobium nobile virginale, for which he was awarded a cultural silver medal.

Professor A. H. Nehrling, of the Massachusetts Agricultural College, gave a most interesting and practical illustrated lecture on "Perennials We Should Grow." The audience filled the lecture hall and showed keen interest in the subject discussed. Mr. Nehrling gave a list of what he considered to be 100 of the best perennials, from tests made at the Amherst station, where 500 varieties are grown.

Entries for the big spring exhibition, which will be held March 21 to 25, are already coming in and the management will have difficulty in accommodating all exhibits. Vacant spacings for the big June exhibition are being taken up rapidly. The tents and outdoor plantings will cover an area of three acres and the bulk of this is already spoken for. One exhibitor will fill a tent 60x100 with azaleas. An exhibit of rhododendrons will occupy a tent 100x110. Entries for both of these big shows should be made as soon as possible.

February 10 Prof. F. W. Rowe, state forester of Massachusetts, will give an illustrated lecture on "Recent Troubles With Our Forest Trees."

Various Notes.

Thomas Roland has one of his big houses at Revere planted with white and pink Spencer peas, from which the first flowers will be cut this week. The plants look magnificent. Roses only will be grown at Revere next season. At present Richmond and Ophelia are doing especially well here. The stock of Easter plants at Nahant looks extra well and includes ramblers, acacias, ericas, camellias, marguerites, hydrangeas, bougainvilleas, etc. All the large cyclamens are sold, but some good medium and small plants are still left. A plant in a 3-inch pot February 2 carried no less than thirty-six perfect flowers.

A number of local nurserymen attended the New England Nurserymen's Association's convention at New Haven, Conn., January 30 and 31. After an animated discussion carried on for two days it was unanimously voted that the association favors a safe and just prohibition or regulation of all foreign importations of nursery stock and florists' stock. It was further voted that purchasers be compensated for all nursery stock and florists' stock condemned and destroyed by inspectors.

John A. Nelson, of Framingham, is spending a delightful vacation at Clearwater, Fla. Among his captures has been a small shark. He and ten other friends brought in 800 pounds of fish as the result of one morning's work.

Robert Montgomery, of Natick, who recently met with an accident, is much improved, but as yet not able to leave

The annual banquet of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club at Horticultural hall February 7 comes just too late to be reported in this issue of The Review. Tickets sold quickly and the occasion promised to be one of the most successful ever held, the decision to use the hall in lieu of a hotel finding general favor. The souvenir booklet for the banquet was liberally supported by advertisers in the trade.

H. H. Rogers, of South Sudbury, is cutting a fine crop of calendulas, wallflowers and mignonette. His leading carnations this season are Enchantress, Alice, Benora, White Enchantress, Beacon and Fenn.

Boston is glad to learn that it will have the carnation convention here in 1918. This is one of the most progressive of all the societies and the members may rest assured that Boston will leave no stone unturned to make next year's show the best ever. Incidentally, we feel quite proud that our New England contingent roped in so goodly a share of the premiums at Indianapolis.

William H. Carr is receiving large consignments of giganteum lilies from F. Macrae & Sons, of Providence, R. I.

Pansies are coming to the fore as a winter flower in Boston. Several stores, notably those of Wax Bros. and the Houghton-Gorney Co., specialize in large bunches of them. In size of flowers and length of stems wonderful advances are being made. Such growers as William Sim, of Cliftondale, and C. T. Beasley & Co., of East Milton, grow pansies remarkably well.

C. S. Andem, of Putnam, Conn., and Frank P. Putnam, of Lowell, are sending in irises of remarkably fine quality, grown from French bulbs. These irises

Seed Trade News

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

President, Kirby B. White, Detroit, Mich.; Secretary-Treasurer, C. E. Kendel, Cleveland, O. Thirty-fifth annual convention, Detroit, June 19 to 21, 1917.

THE death of A. H. McMillan, of the McMillan Seed Co., Atlanta, Ga., is recorded in this week's obituary column.

THE British government has upset the seed trade there by putting a price limit on seed potatoes lower than many dealers paid for their supplies.

ON the whole, January was not so heavy a month as most seedsmen expected it to be as the result of the well known scarcity of seeds.

ONION sets for March 1 delivery are being quoted at $4 to $4.50 for yellow and red and $4.50 to $5 for white, with the supply at these prices reported as limited.

IN the last two years the imports of grass and clover seeds from New Zealand have fallen to less than a fourth what they were in 1914, but the value has declined only half. In other words, prices have doubled.

THE 1917 seed catalogues are marked by a quite general reduction in the weight of the stock used, thereby heading off a part of the increased cost of paper. Many of the books which heretofore have taken zone rates have been brought under eight ounces and go anywhere for 4 cents.

THERE are various reports as to January business. The houses that had their catalogues out early had at least the usual run of mail orders, but some of the houses that count themselves important factors in the seed trade were late, some not even having mailed their books until February.

CONTRACT growers have had little difficulty in booking all the business they want, even at higher prices than have been known for many years, but it is less easy to interest farmers in taking on acreages. The prices of food crops are so high the farmer is not interested in such a speculative proposition as beans, for instance.

PRICES on all seeds, but especially on beans and sweet corn, still are climbing. Contract acreage is exceedingly diffcult to obtain because of the high price of farm produce, onions last week selling as high as $8 per hundred pounds, the highest price since the Civil war, and cabbage selling for as high as $125 per ton in Wisconsin and $100 in Texas.

THE Senate has again voiced its disapproval of the free seed graft by failing to agree to the provision in the agricultural appropriation bill adopted by the House, providing for the expenditure of $243,720 for seeds for congressional distribution. In all probability this item will be put back upon the

You will get an enormous crop of Tomatoes from Bolgiano's Tomato Seed this year. Our Seed was saved from one of the largest crops we have ever had, due to being favored by weather conditions. The vines were loaded with Large, Solid, Red Fruit. We know positively by planting Seed from this "Big Crop" your yield will be much larger than if you had bought seed grown where the weather conditions were not favorable.

A. HENDERSON & CO., 211 North State Street, CHICAGO

insistence of the House when the bill goes to conference. This is the annual custom, for Congress is loath to give up that which has become an institution.

J. H. WARREN, a traveler for the Albert Dickinson Co., Chicago, suffered a badly lacerated foot in a wreck at Cromwell, Ia., February 2. He is at his home at La Grange, Ill.

THE U. S. Department of Agriculture has issued a bulletin, No. 406, called "a professional paper," which will be of interest to many seedsmen. It describes the distinguishing characters of seeds of Sudan grass and Johnson grass, written by F. H. Hillman.

THE Aggeler & Musser Seed Co., Los Angeles, claims to have been the first to offer seed of the casaba varieties of melon. When Golden Beauty was introduced shippers were afraid to go in on it, but it is said last season 500 carloads of fruit of this variety were shipped out of California.

FOLLOWING the precedent set by other Dutch houses, Westerbeck & Klyn, bulb growers of Sassenheim, Holland, have established a permanent branch office at 25 Beaver street, New York. An American bulb man has been put in charge of the office, from which the firm will handle its shipments, correspondence and sales.

GET GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS.

The Bureau of Plant Industry, U. S. Department of Agriculture, has announced the following list of successful bidders for the contracts for supplying the seeds for the congressional free distribution of 1917-18:

SPINACH.

Reports that the Dutch government has placed an embargo on the exportation of spinach seed are not strictly accurate; what has been done is to place restrictions on the traffic. In order to procure a permit to export spinach seed, the Dutch seedsman is required to deposit with the government a certain quantity of some article of food, for which he is required to accept payment at a rate that means the loss of a considerable part of the profit on the spinach. Nevertheless, considerable quantities of spinach seed recently have arrived from Holland. One Chicago house received 2,200 pounds and there is record of four other lots that have come since the restrictions were imposed.

The talk of 75 cents to $1 per pound for spinach so far has proved unwarranted. A Detroit house is said to be quoting 60 cents, but the lot of 2,200 pounds above referred to was placed on sale at 52 cents. There will not, however, be enough to go around at present prices and the higher figures may eventuate.

A Holland authority asserts that three-quarters of all the spinach seed grown in the world has been produced in Holland, German exporters using Dutch seed to fill their orders. He predicts the quantity of spinach seed grown in Holland this year will be considerably less than the small quantity produced in 1916.

Small quantities of Japanese spinach are arriving in the United States, but this is prickly seeded varieties only.

The U. S. commercial attache at The Hague has advised the U. S. government that "for every 100 pounds of round spinach seed which Dutch gardeners wish to export, 100 pounds of spinach

COLD WAVE IN THE SOUTH.

As early as February 2 the seed trade began to feel the effect of the cold wave that extended farther into the south than any other of recent times. In the Texas market gardening section the lowest readings were in the morning of February 2, when 12 degrees was reached at Amarillo, 16 at Abilene, 20 at San Antonio, 22 at El Paso and 26 at Galveston, with 26 at New Orleans. The cold wave then moved east, 14 degrees being registered at Jacksonville, Fla., February 3. Great damage was done to crops and telegraph orders for seeds for replanting showered on the seedsmen who cater to this branch of the business. With many of the items already short, the replacement call was an added embarrassment this season.

IMPORTS VIA ROTTERDAM.

Perhaps it is the uncertain condition of the ocean carrying business that is resulting in unusually heavy imports at this season. Practically all imports of a horticultural nature from Europe at present come via Rotterdam. The Noordam, of the Holland-America line, which reached New York February 1, had the following consignments:

R. M. Ward & Co., 2 cases bulbs.
Stumpp & Walter Co., 9 bags seed; 18 cases bulbs.
J. Roehrs Co., 12 cases trees.

CATALOGUES RECEIVED.

Aurora Nursery Co., Aurora, Ill.—Wholesale list of general nursery stock, in all sizes, from large specimens down to small plants for lining out; eight pages and cover. A few varieties of nut trees are included; perennials also are offered. "We give particular attention," says the company, "to the propagation and growth of ornamental shrubs, although we grow a considerable quantity of shade and ornamental trees."

J. D. Long, Boulder, Colo.—"Long's Garden Guide," a 34-page catalogue of vegetable and flower seeds, bulbs and plants, with cultural directions and two pages of "informal talk" that is rather original and entertaining. "I do not handle the heavy seeds usually classed as field seeds," says Mr. Long, "except a few items like Sudan grass seed and Tepary beans, two items of special value to many of my customers on dry land." Mr. Long says his catalogue "deserves hanging," and he has attached a string to it for that purpose. Prices are quoted according to the cental system.

F. C. Burns, San Rafael, Cal.—A neat, well printed booklet, containing a list of about twenty-six varieties of dahlias, besides the pompons, with cultural suggestions and a brief historical sketch of the development of the genus; sixteen pages, illustrated. "I do not list a large collection," says Mr. Burns, "but such varieties as have been selected for their general superiority."

PEARSON'S MONEYWORTH QUALITY

THE BULB Agent's persistent effort, coupled with his various excuses and reasons for placing your order now at a high price, should in itself be reason enough for you, Mr. Florist, to ponder over.

Frankly, does it not sound possible that there is something wrong somewhere?

Does it not look as if the Dutchmen are especially anxious to get all the business they can at a good, high figure?

Well, never mind the market. If it goes down, do you get the benefit of a lower price? If it rises, will you get what you contracted for? It does not matter which way it may go—the auction houses, department and 10-cent stores will still get good stock at a low figure, while you are buying early and paying their price.

Now, Mr. Florist, are you ready to place your order at advanced figures, when there is time from now until November 1 for buying of Dutch bulbs?

SEEDS FOR FLORISTS

CATALOGUE READY

F. RYNVELD & SONS, HOLLAND—FRANCE—25 W. BROADWAY, NEW YORK

Mention The Review when you write.

"giving lowest market quotations at time list is issued."

Currie Bros. Co., Milwaukee, Wis.—"Currie's Farm and Garden Annual," listing seeds, bulbs, roots, hardy plants, roses, nursery stock, implements and miscellaneous supplies; ninety-six pages, illustrated. "Beans, sweet corn and peas," says the book, "will this year and hereafter be offered and sold by the pound instead of by the measured unit, pint, quart, peck, etc., as heretofore. This system is being adopted by leading seedsmen all over the country, and its adoption from the seedsman's standpoint will considerably simplify the handling of these varieties. To avoid possible misunderstanding and confusion, and as an aid to customers in making out orders, we are showing on the bean, sweet corn and pea pages the quantity value of the pound in terms of the pint and the number of pounds to the bushel."

Audubon Nursery, Wilmington, N. C.—"Descriptive Handbook of Choice Ornamental Trees, Shrubs and Plants," a notably accurate and attractive catalogue, containing forty-eight long, narrow pages, well illustrated and bound in a tasteful, distinctive cover. It is well named a "handbook," being in handy form for pocket and pigeonhole. Fruit-bearing and nut-bearing stock is included in the lists. Bamboos and pampas grass are among the rarer items mentioned.

Danish Seed Import, Minneapolis, Minn.—An illustrated wholesale list of Danish seeds and of vegetable and flowering plants, "for market gardeners and florists"; thirty-two pages and cover. Cabbage and cauliflower are specialties. "The last summer," says Chris. Mosbjerg, the manager, "was an unfavorable season for seed growing, causing a general shortage, but we have been so fortunate as to get a fairly complete stock." Beans, peas and corn are priced by the pound.

L. J. Farmer, Pulaski, N. Y.—"Strawberries and Other Fruit Plants," a 48-page illustrated catalogue of fruit-bearing and ornamental stock, vegetable roots and plants, farm seeds, etc. The first one-third of the book is devoted to strawberry plants and comprises a 4-page article entitled "Seven Years' Experience with Fall-bearing Strawberries."

Jackson & Perkins Co., Newark, N. Y.—Bulletin No. 2, to the trade only; "orders must be made up in tens or multiples of ten at these prices." This is a 12-page list of roses, perennials and general nursery stock, including young stock for nursery planting. "We grow large quantities of roses," says the bulletin, "both for planting out in our own nurseries and to sell to other nurserymen."

G. H. Hunkel Co., Milwaukee, Wis.—Illustrated catalogue of seeds, vegetable plants and roots, summer-flowering bulbs and roots, farm and garden tools, poultry supplies, etc.; a compact, business-like book of eighty pages, with concise cultural directions. A warning is given as to the scarcity of beans. Four years have elapsed since the Hunkel Co. and the Wernich Seed Co. were combined as one organization.

Jos. W. Vestal & Son, Little Rock, Ark.—Two attractive catalogues, general and wholesale. Both are illustrated. The general catalogue is bound in a particularly artistic cover and contains eighty pages, besides four fine, full-page halftone plates and a 4-page pink insert. Among the stock offered in the general list, roses have the first and largest space; then follow bedding and decorative plants, perennials, nursery stock, seeds, vegetable roots and plants. The 16-page wholesale list offers roses and an "assortment of plants for all purposes."

Rush Park Seed Co., Waco, Tex.—"Retail Catalogue and Buyers' Guide," a 64-page illustrated book, listing seeds, bulbs, flowering and vegetable plants, nursery stock, tools and supplies. This suggestion is offered to southern patrons: "Our slogan, 'Raise your own food and put your cotton money in the bank,' is even more pat this year, Texas having done this thing to a greater extent than ever before. There is the danger that 20-cent cotton may prove too great a temptation for some of us, so that the acreage for food and feed crops may be encroached upon."

B. Hammond Tracy, Wenham, Mass.—"Cedar Acres Gladioli," a well illustrated, tasteful 32-page catalogue, with cultural directions and with suggestions regarding the best varieties in each color. Besides the general stock of gladioli in the alphabetical list, the booklet offers assortments of named varieties, and mixtures selected according to color or other peculiarities. "We are pleased to announce," says Mr. Tracy, "the harvest of one of the largest and finest crops of gladiolus bulbs ever stored away at Cedar Acres."

PACIFIC COAST DEPARTMENT

Bend, Ore.—M. Keeney has built a range of glass houses here and has opened for business under the title of Riverside Florist.

Redwood City, Cal.—A wholesale business has been started here by M. Schmidt, who was associated with MacRorie & McLaren for a number of years. Mr. Schmidt will ship his stock to nearby markets.

San Jose, Cal.—The Metzner Floral Co. is in receipt of the twelve gold and silver medals awarded for exhibits at the P. P. I. E. at San Francisco. The awards were won on geraniums, seedling gladioli, petunias, carnations and pelargoniums.

Pullman, Wash.—J. H. Gooding, for the last four years instructor of floriculture at the Washington State College, and previously a worker in the east, has been in Spokane for six weeks, where he underwent an operation for cancer of the jaw. Mr. Gooding is recuperating satisfactorily.

SPOKANE, WASH.

The Market.

Last week marked the passing of the chrysanthemum, which had been with us for almost seven months. There seems to be some quality in the atmospheric conditions here which prolongs the mum season. Home-grown roses are practically out of consideration and will be until bright weather strikes us again. Carnations are about up to demand and of good quality. Von Sions, Golden Spurs and Paper Whites are plentiful, with freesias and Romans to help out. Conditions pointed to an abundance of stock for St. Valentine's day.

Retailers say they are busy, despite a drop in the temperature that tended to check the over-the-counter trade for a few days.

Various Notes.

Robert Briggs, who has been on the sick list for six or seven weeks, is back on the job at the Hoyt Bros. Co. store.

Henry Reimers filled a good order recently for a full-sized pall of Killarney roses and hyacinths.

H. L. Olsson was a recent visitor to florists at Walla Walla.

Adolph Donart and Ernest Stapleton have made a week's visit to florists in the coast cities. L. B. H.

LOS ANGELES.

The Market.

A return to colder weather has again shortened stock, but evidently the cold weather is not confined to southern California. Orders from contiguous territory have not been quite so good as those of the previous week, and this has held the balance even as far as price is concerned, while the quality of the outdoor stock offered is decidedly better. The biggest scarcity of all is in bulbous stock, especially daffodils. It is easy to prophesy if one is not losing anything by the process, but it looks now as if a good deal of the bulbous stock will come in with a rush this year, and that the season will be short. Spring flowers, due now, also will be in with the bulbous stock, and growers of the latter who are looking for contracts with wholesalers will be lucky if they get through on as good terms as usual.

A few sunny days have done more for the indoor than the outdoor carnations, giving the growers a chance to dry out their benches and even give a little fertilizer, which has improved the color and texture of both plants and flowers. The lengthening days also improve the outdoor stock, giving the grower a chance to cultivate and dry out the soil. Indoor roses are about as last reported; the supply is less, but the demand has dropped off on account of the unseasonable weather. A larger supply and a better demand, with slightly reduced prices, are among the probabilities of the near future. Orchids are decidedly scarce; also Cecile Brunner roses and valley. This leaves violets about the only corsage flowers. Freesias are coming in more plentifully now. Funeral work has been good this week, but shipping to some extent has been hindered by snow storms farther north.

Various Notes.

Tassano Bros. have purchased the nursery at Artesia that has been operated by E. Devalck for some years. The place comprises ten acres in all, including about three acres of lath houses, 7,500 feet of glass and a good residence.

The large demand for greens and cut flowers enjoyed by this firm was doubtless the reason for the step. Tony Tassano left this week for a business trip to San Francisco.

Among our visitors this week are E. C. Amling and H. N. Bruns, of Chicago, accompanied by their wives and families. Mr. Amling has had his car shipped out and proposes to make an extended visit.

Thomas Wright, of Wright's Flower Shop, started January 27 for Bear valley and Baldwin lake. As many parts of the desert and practically all of the mountain roads are covered with snow, this trip takes some hardihood, but Tom said he would get there and did.

Paul Staiger has sold his interest in the Washington street nursery to his late partner, John Fincken, who will run it from now on. He has also decided to rent the nursery at Lomita, but at the time of writing this has not quite been settled. Mr. Staiger goes to Santa Barbara in association with Mr. Underhill, who has a large landscape business there.

F. Lichtenberg says business is keeping up finely, three large decorations being on the cards in one day this week.

Fred Sperry, of the L. A. Floral Co., reports some interference with shipping north on account of snow storms, but so far this season the company has had little trouble. Shipments hold up well and keep everyone on the jump.

The advent of S. Murata & Co. on Los Angeles street rounds out a regular market locality. The sympathy of all in the trade is extended to Mrs. Cartwright, the bookkeeper, whose husband died January 27 from injuries received in falling from a ladder.

H. W. Turner is sending in magnificent roses now, his September Morn, Hoosier Beauty, Prima Donna and others being the equal of anything seen in this market. Mr. Turner has recovered sufficiently from his recent injury to be able to drive the big car again.

Darling's Flower Shop has been showing some of the finest cyclamens ever seen on the Pacific coast. They are magnificent plants in every way and are marvels of cultural skill.

SEATTLE, WASH.

The Market.

Business continues to improve. There is no overabundance of stock of any kind and in some items there is a shortage. Carnations are selling about the best of any cut flowers at present, and as the supply is none too plentiful there are none left over from each day's sales. Roses also are scarce; there are hardly enough to go around. Daffodils, tulips and hyacinths sell well at good prices. There does not appear to be too much bulbous stock in the market this year. Violets now are of excellent quality and the demand for them is good. Many begonias, cyclamens and primulas are coming to hand and their sales are moderately good.

Various Notes.

A visit to the conservatories in Volunteer park is now particularly interesting to florists. Jacob Unlauff, the superintendent in charge, has developed a fine strain of cyclamen plants, and the plants now on display as a result of his selection of seed are the admiration of all visitors. Florists, more critical than the average visitors, see nothing to complain of in colors, habit or health of the plants. The park commissioners have decided to build an additional house, to be principally used for propagating purposes.

J. J. Bonnell has some curious products at his nurseries just now. He has received many novelties from Japan and visitors find much to interest them in the plants and in Mr. Bonnell's descriptions of the ways and doings of the orientals.

The Seattle Landscape Gardeners' Association has been formed and starts out under favorable auspices. At a recent meeting the following were elected officers for the first year: President, W. C. Sherven; vice-president, L. Holland; secretary, P. H. Williams; treasurer, J. J. Bonnell; executive committee, R. W. Smith, J. Sandahl and J. Lindley. About twenty members have signed the charter and it is expected many more will join soon. The first meeting was held February 6. Sessions will be held twice monthly in the Chamber of Commerce assembly rooms.

The Fremont Floral Co. is busy renovating its benches in two of the houses.

This new class of miniature roses is gaining wonderfully in popularity, and most deservedly so. Their exceeding freedom and continuity of bloom is unsurpassed in any other bedding or border plant. Their possibilities are worth your attention and consideration.

Phyllis	Ellen Poulsen	Jeanne d'Arc
Erna Teschendorff	Baby Dorothy	Maman Turbat

BABY DOLL

The most rapturously and stikingly beautiful little rose ever introduced. The color is absolutely new and startling in its brilliancy—golden yellow, tipped with clear cerise. The little buds and open flowers are elegantly finished and of most perfect form. Habit of the very best, strong and compact; freedom of bloom is remarkable and continuous throughout the entire season. We have given it a fair and thorough trial and have no hesitancy in offering it as the one best selling rose you ever handled. It is a money-maker.

Also special prices on all commerial varieties of Hybrid Teas.

that required quantities of flowers, a splendid volume of business was done, and cut stock was cleaned up nearly every day. It kept the retailers busy procuring supplies and sometimes there were disappointments. As has been said, this slight shortage has been "healthy for all branches of the trade." All of the retailers report that January was a good month; some say the best January ever. An increase as large as fifty per cent is reported. It no doubt would be a good guess to say that the average increase was twenty per cent over the business of January, 1916.

With the advent of a full supply of daffodils and tulips, the strain on the carnation supply has been relieved and some days there are enough of them to meet all demands. The cuts of roses are still light. Plenty of California-grown violets are shown and the supply of Oregon violets has increased. Potted tulips, daffodils and cinerarias lead in blooming plants. A few Dutch hyacinths have come in.

Various Notes.

The seedsmen have finished mailing their spring catalogues. Some of them face a rather embarrassing situation due to the sudden and unexpected advance in the cost of many kinds of seed. Their retail prices were based on their contract figures with the growers, but they realize that the quantities contracted for will fall far short of supplying them for the season and that they cannot go into the market and buy what they need at figures which would permit them to sell at their catalogue prices. Beet seeds, spinach seeds, onion sets, seed potatoes and some sorts of beans are some of the items that worry the retail seedsmen.

At a meeting of the Oregon Sweet Pea Society held January 26, it was decided to affiliate with the American Sweet Pea Society. All the sweet pea societies of this state will be urged to unite with the Oregon society. A sweet pea show will be held in the new Auditorium at the time of the National Education Association convention next June. This will be the first flower show to be held in the new municipal building. A campaign to enlarge the membership of the Oregon Sweet Pea Society will be launched. J. H. Dundore is president and Mrs. Harriet Hendee secretary of the society.

A portion of the dock at the Charles H. Lilly Co. seed store collapsed from the weight placed upon it and a quantity of goods was injured by immersion in the water.

Spring yellows are shown everywhere and several stores have a window decorated exclusively with them.

Harry Newel, formerly with the Rahn & Herbert Co., now is with the Wilson, Crout & Gehr Co.

J. J. Butzer says his January mail orders number more than twice as many as the combined three previous Januarys.

Axel Alenius, for the last two years foreman at the establishment of the Wilson, Crout & Gehr Co., plans to leave March 1 for New Mexico, where he expects to make his future home. The Market.

There has been little change in the condition of the market during the last week. A little rain fell, but the weather turned cold immediately afterwards, which largely offset the little good the moisture might have done violets and other outdoor flowers. As it is, stock generally is barely sufficient to meet requirements, and it is conceded by florists that more bulbous flowers could be utilized to advantage. Daffodils are about the most plentiful item, but the supply is readily absorbed each day and prices are holding up longer than those of former years, in view of the slow arrival of other offerings of a competitive nature, such as tulips, hyacinths, narcissi, etc. One day daffodils dropped to $1 per hundred, but they went back to $1.50 again the next day, when the cold shortened all lines. Violets are scarce and rather poor in quality.

Few roses are being retailed under $1.50 per dozen and the offerings at this figure are limited. Hadley, Ophelia, White Killarney and Red Radiance all show excellent quality and clean up at comparatively high prices. Carnations continue to occupy about the same position. Good stock retails at 35 cents per dozen and extra fine flowers bring 50 cents, the latter including Sensation and Edna Brown. Harrisii lilies are being featured quite extensively and a good demand is reported. Indoor sweet peas clean up readily at unusually high prices. Orchids are shown in a wide assortment and all varieties manage to find an outlet. Some valley is offered, but it is still on the short side of the market. In blooming plants, fine cyclamens and cinerarias are offered, and many rhododendrons are beginning to arrive. Potted tulips and hyacinths have the preference, however. Quantities of pussy willows and acacias are used and cut heather maintains its popularity.

Various Notes.

Several of the large downtown florists made a stronger drive for St. Valentine's day business this year than ever before. One concern, at least, used the heart-shaped red stamp designed by the Chicago Florists' Club on every parcel being sent out.

Avansino Bros. have been busy with table decorations, most of the orders calling for spring flowers. They think general business would be better if spring flowers were more plentiful and cheap, as these offerings are shown preference over roses and carnations.

Patrick Orr, of the Albert O. Stein force, has been called out of town by the serious illness of his mother.

Pelicano, Rossi & Co. report an increasing demand for spray orchids, especially cypripediums and phalænopsis. These varieties have not replaced cattleyas by any means, but more of them are being sold than in former years.

C. Kooyman has contracted for the cut of a large tract of daffodils, about 700,000 plants, and expects to ship many to outside points. He reports orders for freesia bulbs coming in faster than usual.

Several important matters are to be taken up at the February meeting of the Pacific Coast Horticultural Society and a large attendance is expected.

David Lichtenstein, the Terminal Florist, at 7 East street, has been featuring an orchid special, which he says has a tendency to stimulate business generally, as people coming in to buy orchids are likely to leave orders for other flowers or plants. Being in the Ferry building, this establishment gets considerable funeral work from Marin county commuters.

A. Hammersmith, formerly with Joseph's on Grant avenue, has accepted a position with the Art Floral Co.

The many friends of Mrs. Frank Peli-

The Story Of The Oak Tree

On our grounds here at West Grove is a towering oak, planted evidently about the time of William Penn. If five of us should join hands, we still could not reach around its trunk.

Its wonderful growth is truly typical of the tree growth in and around West Grove. And it is common knowledge that tree growth is a most reliable index to soil value. Big trees, good soil. Little trees, poor soil.

In the same ideal soil that produced this gigantic oak our shrubs make their strong, fibrous root growth. That's why we have adopted the oak tree as a symbol of their sturdiness, and call them Oak Brand Shrubs.

IN UNION LIES STRENGTH.

[The following is an extract from a paper, "Would a National Retail Association Benefit the Entire Trade?" by J. R. Mayhew, Waxahachie, Tex., read before the Western Association of Nurserymen, January 24.]

The world is divided largely into two classes: Those who do not believe in organization, who are "agin" all forms of organized effort, and those who allow their ideas of organization to run riot. And, again, those who believe that organization, to be effective, should take special cognizance of their particular business, doing for them what they have not been able to do for themselves. The members of this and similar organizations take the position that organization must be along lines of and for the common good, and that the individual benefits resulting from organized effort are incident thereto.

It is hard for us to get away from the paternalistic in government, whether it be organization for the proper safeguarding of society, which finds expression in municipal, state and federal laws, or organization within social, business or religious lines. The question of what this particular organization is doing for me, rather than what it is doing for the common good, is a question that will not down. We are inclined to view life from our own circumscribed environment and I think I am not far wrong when I say that this question of retail organization was first conceived in a spirit of retaliation against imagined wrongs. "The retailer is not getting a square deal in the American Association of Nurserymen, because all the affairs of the association are in the hands of those who represent wholesale interests." Have you not heard such an expression, coupled with the veiled threat that unless certain policies believed to be inimical to the interests of the retailer were abolished, the retailers would secede and form an association among themselves? I believe, men, that beyond any sort of question this position is dead wrong and that only harm to the nursery interests as a whole could come from a further agitation of this question.

The A. A. N. Workers.

I hold no brief to defend those who have in the past been responsible for the affairs of the American Association of Nurserymen, but this one thing I know, and you know, that there never lived a truer and more unselfish corps of men than those who have been responsible for the association's affairs. They have labored while many of us slept in peace; they have spent their own money and traveled many thousands of miles to protect the interests of even the humblest man engaged in

Do It Now!

Go over your Rose Houses carefully and estimate the plants you need for replanting this Spring, and place your order. Roses are going to be scarce. The Manetti situation is such that those who get it are fortunate, and the demand is far greater than the limited supply. We have sold over 100,000 grafted Roses in the last two weeks. We have 200,000 more to sell. There is considerable building contemplated. "Changing from Carnations to Roses" is a frequent explanation made when placing an order. If you are short at planting time it will be your fault and not ours. The growing of grafted Roses is an industry in itself. At Cromwell the large quantity of Roses grown for cut flowers makes it possible to get scions that are first-class. We want your Rose Plant order, and we want to be able to say "yes" to your inquiry. Estimate your requirements and write us.

the handling of trees. It has made no difference whether one has been faithful in meeting the financial obligations of the association or not, he has received through the efforts of our association workers benefits great beyond computation. Whether he be retailer or wholesaler, whether he be dealer or agent, if he deals in trees and plants his business is worth more today because of the eternal vigilance of our association officers.

Is there any considerable difference among us anyway, friends, whether one ships his stock in carload or by local freight and express? Are not our interests in a large degree at least mutual? Can we afford to view with equanimity an effort to divide our forces when every thinking man must realize the hazard of such a division? Let us as retailers and wholesalers get away from our own little affairs and, shoulder to shoulder, work together for the upbuilding of the nursery interests of America. Let us quit talking about "big fellows versus little fellows," for none of us is big unless our perspective of life is true, unless we can lose sight of selfish interests in service to our fellows, and none of us is little except that we be selfish.

No Other Organization Needed.

On a former occasion I declared myself against further organization, and am of the same opinion today, because I think the ground is entirely covered and the interests of all are protected within our present organizations. As one interested principally in the sale of stock through retail endeavor, I feel that I have at all times received a square deal and am entirely satisfied that there is no present need of any member of the fraternity but that can be met satisfactorily through our present organizations.

During a period of more than forty years, the combined efforts of the nurserymen of America have resulted in gathering together a membership of between 450 and 500. Every possible effort has been made to interest every worthy man engaged in the nursery business or in closely allied trades. The great need of our officers through all the past has been money, and much more would have been accomplished had it not been for this handicap. At the Detroit meeting in June, 1915, I had the honor of presenting a plan for the reorganization of the association which provided a better financial system than we had had in the past, and the plan was adopted by practically a unanimous vote of the members present. It is believed by the executive committee that when this plan is in thorough working order it will provide approximately $10,000 annually, an amount sufficient to meet creditably the needs of our officers. No plan for raising funds could be fairer than that provided by our new constitution, where every member's assessment is based upon his earnings.

Funds Would Be Lacking.

We are just beginning to get the machinery of this new organization to working smoothly, when along comes the suggestion that the majority of the members secede and form an organization of those who are interested especially in the retail end of the business. What effect all this would have on the affairs of the association is, to be sure, a matter of conjecture. The way the question presents itself to my mind is that there is room in the American Association of Nurserymen for every worthy nurseryman in America, but there is no room in America for another association, retail or otherwise. Furthermore, while the present association would suffer should any considerable number of its members set up shop for themselves, the only thing to be gained would be an empty name. A large part of the funds provided for the running expenses of the association come from men who are true to the principle, "In union there is strength," and who, I believe, will not be easily persuaded to turn their backs upon the association that has succored them through all these years. The natural result would be an association without adequate funds to accomplish anything worth while.

A Time of Stress.

A certain resolution which was before the Milwaukee convention is, in some measure at least, the basis for the agitation of a retail association. I have no criticism for the purposes of this resolution; in fact, I am in heartiest accord with the principle enunciated, that wholesale trade lists should go only to bona fide nurserymen. I am not in accord with the methods proposed for gathering the information as to who are entitled to trade lists, but this is a different question. What I started out to say is that I am in hearty sympathy with this reform, which is not new, but which has occupied a place on every program, both state, district and national, for the last twenty-five years, and I am definitely sure that ninety per cent of our wholesale friends would not knowingly send wholesale lists to any person not entitled to them. Is it not probable that such irregularities can be corrected within the association as it at present exists? The wholesale nurseryman would not run through one season without his best customer, the retailer, and I take it that whatever policies are pursued by the few, and which work a hardship or loss on the retailer, will be heartily condemned by one and all alike.

Whatever is necessary to make our present organization more useful in serving the interests of all, that let us do, but let that be done in union. The present is perhaps the most critical period in the whole life of the nursery business. Beset on all sides by unfair legislation, each state vying with every other state in the enactment of laws which are proving an onerous burden, entails a fight for our very existence. Many of our leading nurserymen are giving up the fight because of pecuniary losses and are turning their attention to other lines of business, and many more of us would follow their example, perhaps, if we knew how to effect the change without ruin.

In such a time it behooves us to stand squarely behind our chosen officers, furnishing them the sinews of war and urging them on to victory. I am not in sympathy with further organization, but I am in sympathy with the thought that we should all labor together to the end that membership in the American Association of Nurserymen may represent all that is true and best in a noble and upright profession.

The Market.

Last week we experienced the coldest weather of the winter. Notwithstanding this, business was exceedingly active and the demand was stronger than that of any week this season, with the exception of holiday week. The days have been dark and this, added to the extreme cold, has made the shortage of carnations and roses more marked. Bulbous stock, however, has filled in the breach; tulips, daffodils and Dutch hyacinths are used in decorative work to a great extent. Callas and Easter lilies are utilized for funeral clusters.

Snapdragons also are helping out in the shortage of roses. Cattleyas are plentiful and sweet peas are abundant in the Spencer varieties. Violets meet with a good call, both singles and doubles. Azaleas are coming to the front in the pink and white varieties, and rhododendrons are making a good showing. Potted freesias, Golden Spur daffodils, baby primroses, cyclamens and yellow narcissi are selling well.

Various Notes.

The Doswell Floral Co. last week had a fine window display of bulbous flowers. This company is having a heavy run on funeral work.

Miss Catherine Vesey spent last week at Muncie, Ind., the guest of her sister.

Clem Lanternier is on the sick list from stomach trouble and has been put on a diet for three weeks.

Miss Helen Patten, proprietress of the Patten Flower Shop, Toledo, O., spent several days here last week, visiting her mother, Mrs. Mary Patten, and other relatives. Miss Patten reports that business in Toledo is booming, but the florists are experiencing a serious shortage of stock.

Some excellent Ophelia and Russell roses are being sent to this market from the F. J. Knecht & Co. greenhouses south of the city. Their carnations in the Enchantress varieties are also of fine quality.

Markey Bros. have their azaleas in fine shape now and their bulbous stock from the Hale avenue greenhouses is showing up well. Funeral work has been in heavy demand.

The Flick Floral Co. is advertising in the trolley cars. This concern had a number of large decorations last week. Some fine rhododendrons, azaleas and snapdragons were noted at this establishment. R. F.

ROOTED CARNATION CUTTINGS

IMMEDIATE DELIVERY

¶ We are now booking orders for our new seedling Superb, $12.00 per 100, $100.00 per 1000.

Superb is a seedling of Gloriosa and Enchantress. It has the good stem of Gloriosa and the fine growing habit of Enchantress. The color is a flesh pink and it keeps its color at all seasons. The flowers average about three inches, are very full and generally receive full score on substance. The flowers are all perfect and do not split. In the four years we have grown it, it has proved the best commercial variety, barring none.

BUFFALO.

The Market.

Business was brisk until the week end; then it diminished somewhat. American Beauties are still clinging to the short side, as well as Ophelia, Ward, Sunburst and Killarney. Russell roses are also more or less scarce and those that do reach the market are off color, due mostly to the lack of sun. Carnations sell at an advanced figure and clear readily. A large percentage of the carnations, however, are weak-stemmed, small and split. Ward, White Wonder and Enchantress are leading in quality as well as quantity.

The supply of valley has increased considerably, as well as cattleyas, and both items continue to sell well. Freesias, Roman hyacinths and sweet peas are a dominating factor in the market at the present time. Violets are doing nicely. Jonquils, daffodils and Paper Whites and yellow narcissi are more than plentiful, but they move along nicely. Easter lilies as yet are quite scarce. Some snapdragons may be seen occasionally. There is a large and good assortment of pot plants, some of which would have been more than welcome at Christmas and some of which we shall be glad to have at Easter. The supply of greens has been equal to requirements.

Various Notes.

Work is being started on the conservatory for the new store of W. J. Palmer & Son, on Delaware avenue. The store has a 30-foot frontage and is 100 feet deep. The conservatory in the rear will also measure 30x100. The firm hopes to take possession of the new store by April 1.

Messrs. Cannon and Wilke, both of the S. A. Anderson staff, have been on the sick list.

David Scott, of Corfu, has been ill for the last two weeks. The growers at Corfu have experienced considerable difficulty in securing fuel, and during this severe winter weather they are using more than ever.

F. G. Nelson, of the Burlington Willow Ware Shops, Burlington, Ia., called on the trade this week. A. E.

Lincoln, Neb.—Hiltner Bros., who are doing a prosperous retail business, will this season increase their facilities by the erection of a show house adjoining the store. The Foley Greenhouse Mfg. Co., Chicago, is milling the material.

Greenhouse Heating.

SUBSCRIBERS are invited to write the Editor of this Department with regard to any details of greenhouse heating that are not understood. But please do not ask The Review to make a choice of apparatus for you. The greenhouse heating equipment advertised in this paper is, we believe, the best for the trade to buy, and each article the best in the special field of its adaptation.

PIPING A SOUTHERN HOUSE.

I wish to ask you what will be the best way to pipe a greenhouse, 16x50, which I am about to build here, in northern Georgia. The house will run from northeast to southwest. There will be a workroom at the northeast end. All other parts of the house, the sides and one end, will be exposed to sun and wind alike. I shall use a Wilks boiler, 20x30. The center bed will be six feet wide and the two side beds will each be three feet wide. Please tell me just how to pipe the house. Will one 2-inch flow be enough? R. D. M.—Ga.

We are at a loss to know what to recommend in this case, since the information regarding the house and its requirements is incomplete in some respects. Provided the house is well built and there is no glass in the side walls, we would expect to be able to secure a temperature of 55 degrees, when the outside temperature is 10 degrees above zero, by running a 2-inch flow pipe on each wall plate and connecting each flow with three 1½-inch returns. For 60 to 63 degrees an additional return will be needed for each flow, as well as for each two feet of glass in each wall.

In case the top of the boiler is two or three feet below the lower end of the returns it would be possible to supply two coils, each of which contains three 1½-inch returns, by means of a single 2-inch flow pipe placed near the ridge, but we would expect a greater economy in fuel and a more even distribution of heat if two flows are used.

THE HEIGHT OF THE FLOWS.

Kindly let us know which, in your opinion, is the better system of piping for greenhouse heating—the overhead flows, or flows just above the ground level. Is there any difference in the quantity of coal used with the two systems, to maintain a stated temperature?

M. & C.—Conn.

The whole matter of overhead and under-bench flow pipes rests largely upon the fact that the higher the returns above the heater, everything else being equal, the better the circulation and the more even the distribution of heat. The result is a saving in the amount of fuel used. From this it will be seen that when the returns are several feet above the top of the heater, the use of overhead flows is not so absolutely necessary as when the returns are on a level with, or below, the top of the heater.

Warm air, of course, tends to rise. Therefore, in order to keep the heat where it can be utilized by the plants, the returns should either be under the benches or on the walls, not more than two or three feet from the floor. Ordinarily we prefer to run the flow pipes downhill, and in order to secure the needed fall for the flow and return pipes we think it well to place the flow pipes for supplying the coils for the walls or side benches on the wall plates, unless the returns are below the top of the heater, in which case the flow may be carried near the ridge.

For houses more than ten feet wide, if there is a middle bench for which bottom heat is desired, a flow may be run overhead to supply a center coil, in addition to the flow pipes on the plates. In still wider houses, in which there are four or five benches, other flows may be carried on the purlin posts, or suspended from the purlins. As a rule, we prefer to keep the flows away from the glass, but they should not be so low as to interfere with the growth of the plants, or with their care. In all except the narrowest houses, the middle flow pipe may be two to four feet below the ridge, but if the pipes at the purlins are more than one foot below the glass they will generally be in the way.

In most cases the best results will be obtained by locating the flows several feet above the returns, but this is not necessary when the returns are well above the boiler.

The right size of the flow pipes, as well as the number of them, depends upon the length of the house and the size and number of the returns. As a rule, we prefer 2-inch flows in narrow houses fifty feet or less in length, but would use 2½-inch flows for houses fifty to 200 feet long and 3-inch for houses of a greater length, for which a forced circulation might be desirable.

The Market.

Roses are more plentiful at this writing, but they clean up every day at satisfactory prices. American Beauties continue in brisk demand and bring top-notch figures. Russell roses are arriving in large quantities, but there are none too many to go around. Killarney Brilliant roses are reaching the market in exceptionally fine condition and the receipts of Ophelia appear to be heavier. Carnations are plentiful enough to supply the demand, but they are not so numerous as they were. As a result prices are better, although as yet not what they should be. Tulips, jonquils, daffodils and freesias are more numerous and the call for these is heavy. The first Rainbow freesias made their appearance this week and sold as soon as they were offered for sale. Valley was unusually scarce last week; it was almost impossible to supply the demand. Orchids are in good supply and there are plenty of gardenias to go around. Easter lilies and callas are selling quickly on account of the large quantity of funeral work. Sweet peas are seen in large quantities everywhere, but they have a good call and there is never any surplus to speak of. Snapdragons, mignonette, pansies and daisies are included in the many offerings. Pussy willows are featured everywhere and move readily at prices ranging from 25 to 50 cents per bunch.

Various Notes.

The outlook for St. Valentine's day business is promising, and florists have rosy anticipations as to the sales on this day. Everywhere the windows are decorated with hearts, heart-shaped corsage boxes, and novelties that are exceptionally catchy. Together with extensive advertising, this day's business is expected to triple that of last year's. Corsages of roses, peas, combinations of violets and freesias, and forget-me-nots are being advocated. Potted plants and baskets of flowers are also displayed to good advantage for this day.

The Helmer Flower Shop had an artistic valentine decoration at the Women's building last week. The stage was artistically decorated with palms and hearts of red carnations, and large hearts of the same flowers arranged with electric lights were suspended from the ceiling.

Another elaborate decoration that took place the same week at the Women's building was carried out by Schramm Bros., for an annual dance of the Knights of Columbus. The orchestra was hidden by a large bank of palms and azaleas, which covered the entire width of the stage. Large clusters of Mrs. Russell roses in tall vases were at each end of the stage. The emblem of the lodge was done in flowers and suspended from the ceiling in the center of the hall.

Mrs. Ernest Glauser, who for some time has been confined to the hospital, was taken to her home last week. Her condition is much improved.

Otto Krueger has returned from the carnation meeting at Indianapolis. Mr. Krueger was much delighted with the exhibition and has much praise for the florists of the Hoosier city.

Harry Heinl has been confined to his home for some time. He took cold at

The Market.

Business has been extremely good during the last week, and the indications are that it will be the same this week. Decorative and funeral work has been heavy; all in all, the demand has been in excess of the supply. Roses have been bringing from $4 to $20 and are hard to procure at that. A retailer remarked that he had never known roses to be so scarce as at the present time. Carnations, in fair supply, are bringing from $3 to $4, owing to the scarcity of other flowers.

Callas and Easter lilies are now rarely conspicuous in the market. Spring flowers are more abundant and are experiencing an excellent call. Jonquils and tulips take the lead and bring from $3 to $5 per hundred. Cut hyacinths are popular at from $5 to $12.50. Paper White narcissi are cleaning up daily at $3 per hundred; the yellow ones are not moving so well at the same price.

The freesias always receive attention and are especially good property at $1.50 to $4. Sweet peas are becoming more plentiful, their prices ranging from 50 cents to $1.50. Home-grown violets are active at 60 cents to $1 per hundred. More snapdragons are being seen, along with pansies and calendulas. More orchids are available, but valley remains about the same. Potted bulbous stock, obconica and malacoides primroses, cyclamens, azaleas and a few cinerarias are in steady demand.

Various Notes.

With the mercury down to 8 degrees below and a raging wind to combat with, the florists had a hard time last week preventing freeze-outs. At the Pahud Floral Co. range a house of cyclamens and a great number of ferns were frozen. This was due to poor coal, which clinkered on the grates and made it impossible to raise steam.

The E. G. Hill Co. reports an extremely good week in spring flowers, the demand being greater than that of previous years. The greenhouses at Richmond are producing some of the finest Golden Spur narcissi seen in the market.

Hartje & Elder have an exceptionally fine house of sweet peas in bloom.

While en route to the Bertermann Bros. Co. place at Cumberland last week, O. E. Steinkamp's machine had a rear-end collision with another machine and was badly damaged.

The Circle Flower Store had an appropriate window last week in observance of the birthday of Robert Burns. Flowers harmonizing with plaid ribbon and Scotch heather made an extraordinary display.

During the warm spell just previous to the cold snap, a return pipe at the Temperley establishment burst and caused a great deal of anxiety. As the weather was favorable, the pipe was mended before any damage to the stock was done.

Albert Stanley, who has been ill for the last ten days, now is much better and is able to get around. E. E. T.

Hannibal, Mo.—Vernon S. Griffen, of Griffen's Flower Shop, says that business this year is double that of a year ago. The stor is at 316 Broadway and the greenhouse range of 15,000 feet of glass, at an outlying location. Work has been started on another house, 9x100 feet, for vegetable plants.

HAVE YOU

Ever hauled to market a load of plants in round clay pots and noted how many times you said something when you found the plants standing on the blossom end, all smashed and gone?

These unpleasant memories will vanish if you use our square paper bands and pots in which to grow all of your spring plants. Our paper pots will set square, stay square and ride square. You will have better plants at lower cost, and when you carry them to market you will not have to lug the heavy clay pots, as one clay pot will weigh more than a whole flat of paper ones.

The Ramsburg Locking Pot

is the ideal soil-container. It is made of first quality manila board, and will last the entire season and remain in shape to market the plants in. We have a size for every requirement, both in bands and pots. Send a postal for samples and price list.

The advantages are all with the square paper pots. Give them a trial.

KANSAS CITY, MO.

The Market.

The demand for cut flowers has been strong throughout the week, the heavy funeral work being the chief cause of the great activity. There was little call for cut flowers for decorations, but decorative work has been heavy until the present week. There is more stock coming in, but not enough to satisfy the demand, especially for roses. Carnations are cleaning up well. The supply has increased, but prices remain the same. Bulbous stock is more plentiful and of better quality. Some good hyacinths are seen. Sweet peas are more plentiful and clean up at all times.

Various Notes.

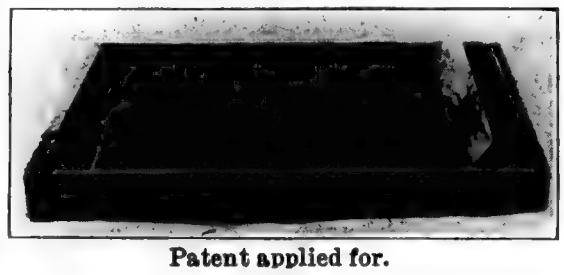
Arthur Newell took advantage of the extremely cold weather to remodel his store. He made some changes and redecorated the store without interfering with the business going on.

Samuel Murray reports that funeral work during the last two weeks has been unusually good.

The Rosery has some good bulbous stock. The hyacinths are especially fine for so early in the season. This concern makes a success of bulbous stock every year.

James Payne has his greenhouses in good shape. His carnations have done especially well this season. He has a good lot of cyclamens in 5-inch pots and is busy getting his bedding stock in shape. This will be Mr. Payne's last season at his present location. He is looking for another location, the ground he now occupies being too expensive on which to operate greenhouses. The range is being surrounded by different lines of business that do not attract enough people to justify him in remaining there.

W. J. Barnes reports a big January business, an increase of thirty per cent over that of last year. He has some nice rhododendrons coming into bloom and will have them until after Easter. His Easter plants are looking well.



E. Humfeld reports that January business was the best he has had since he began business. There was a large quantity of funeral work during the month.

T. J. Noll & Co. have received their new line of Easter baskets and supplies. Mr. Noll is building up a large trade in the supply line. He reports that his consignments in roses are far short of the demand.

Henry Kusik & Co. report a scarcity of roses in all grades, but plenty of carnations and bulbous stock. W. J. B.

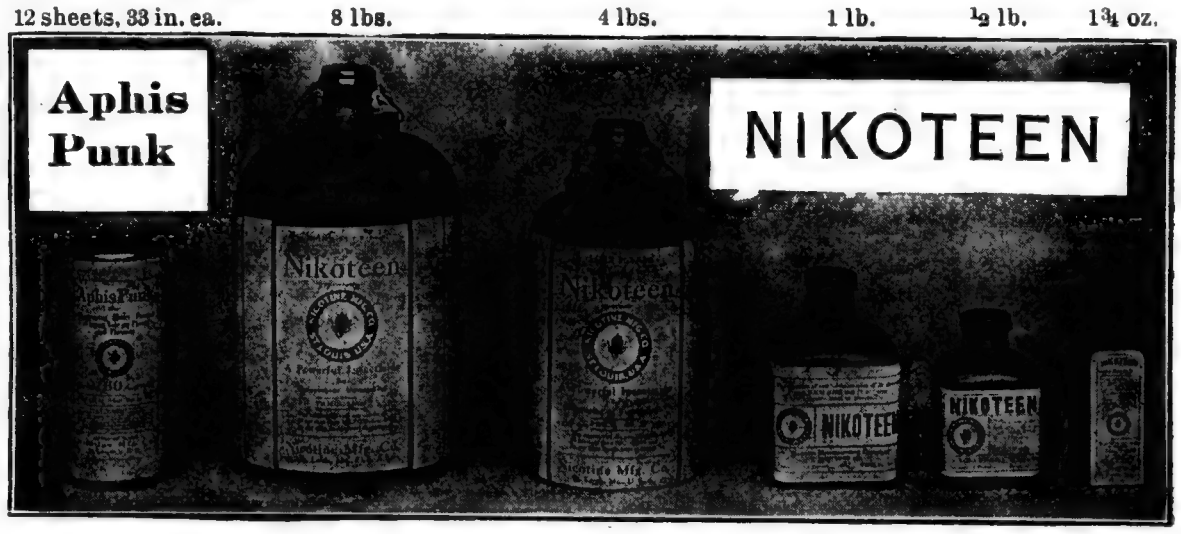
Alphonse J. Nevraumont, manager of the California Seed Co., says that gladiolus bulbs came through in good shape this year and that their sale leaves no ground for complaint.

Mrs. Hallawell, of the Hallawell Seed Co., says the light rain helped business last week.

More than the usual number of wedding decorations, in addition to heavy funeral work and a fairly active store trade, have been keeping the force at T. Mosco's store busy.

One of the largest wedding decorations of the season was carried out by Albert O. Stein last week. Practically all kinds of blooms were combined in a graceful effect in the drawing room, hall and dining room.

A new store is being opened on California street, near Hyde street, under the name of California Floral Co., of which Steve Fazo is proprietor. He has a nursery at Colma and expects to do a wholesale and retail business. His place is being nicely fitted up and will be ready for occupancy within a few days.



One of Podesta & Baldocchi's men had his automobile stolen recently, but was fortunate in getting it back.

January was a good month in the florists' business, according to N. L. Baldocchi, of Podesta & Baldocchi, funeral work being the principal item.

DETROIT.

The Market.

The cold weather that hit Detroit last week resulted in a few frozen shipments. Business has been fair and stock more plentiful. Carnations, sweet peas and bulbous stock, although of fine quality, are inclined to drag. Roses clear readily. These are of fine quality but high in price. Valley is scarce and the demand for it is light. Violets are plentiful, but the quality is only fair. Hyacinths, tulips and other bulbous plants are selling well.

Various Notes.

Among those from Detroit who attended the carnation show at Indianapolis were E. A. Fetters, Robert Rahaley, Thomas Browne, Albert Pochelon and Albert Stahelin.

Harold Grens has gone to Chicago for a few days to look over the market. He accompanied J. F. Sullivan, of this city.

Bowling Scores.

The Detroit Bowling Club met February 1. The following scores were made:

Bisons.				Brownies.
Bloy	202	208	165	McHugh	130	131	180
Ingold	188	147	130	Bezemer	158	158	185
Pautke	166	103	147	Taylor	132	162	183
Klang	142	152	101	Sullivan	154	145	131
Streit	181	158	164	Stock	165	155	206

The Bisons won two out of three, thereby again gaining first place.

H. T.

CLEVELAND.

Market conditions remain unchanged. Bulbous stock is plentiful and carnations and roses are in heavy crop. Valley and lilies are in supply sufficient for all demands.

The Florists' Club meeting February 5 was well attended, more than fifty members being present to hear a paper on chrysanthemums by Elmer D. Smith, of Adrian, Mich. E. G. Hill, of Richmond, Ind., will address the club on roses at the March meeting.

The Detroit bowlers journeyed to our fair city February 7 and competed with local stars for the silver trophy offered by the Michigan Cut Flower Exchange. Cleveland had the edge, having by a previous engagement won three games to Detroit's one. The trophy goes to the team winning four games out of seven.

Saves Labor in Handling Small Aster Plants

Following is an extract from a letter received from J. G. Botkin, of Urbana, Ohio:

"One of our great savings in labor with Skinner Irrigation has been in handling the small aster plants. This plant is very susceptible to heat and drought. Formerly we potted off all the small plants in 2-inch stand of plants when planting out, even in hot weather. Now we take good seedling plants and by using the irrigation right after the planting, we can get a much better stand at greatly reduced cost."

Metropolitan

For COMMERCIAL GREENHOUSES

This Metropolitan semi-iron commercial greenhouse, 18 x 200 feet, was erected for the Springfield Floral Co., of Springfield, N. J.

Note the neat general appearance of this greenhouse, particularly of the walls. This is made possible by the Metropolitan patented cast iron eave, which, besides being ice-clearing, also has a combination drip conductor feature which carries off all waters of condensation from the inside of the roof. Notice, too, that no wood headers are necessary with this eave.

Sash Opening Device and Greenhouse Fittings

Did you ever stop and notice this cut of the Big Advance Sash Operator? Just at a glance you see a neatly constructed operator. Then starting to look, you see a well built machine plate with worm and gear, then you see a good heavy chain made of the best steel. The hand wheel shows mechanical construction in strongness and appearance. Then going to the top of the machine, examine the roller pipe bearing, the strong but neatly designed sprocket wheel, the angle bracket and other parts. Well, the arms and hangers you notice are made for years' use.

Now that you have noticed each and every part, just picture it in your new or old house. Wouldn't it make a difference? Something that gives years of satisfactory service. All up-to-date florists know the importance of proper ventilation and, therefore, select this unequaled device. Thirteen years devoted to this line means we have a device that is well worth inspection.

We cannot explain how much time and trouble our greenhouse fittings will save you, for there isn't enough space on this page. You know our line, however, and can see what they mean to you.

Our catalogue gives further and more detailed information. Just take one minute of your valuable time and write us for Catalogue U.

Slight increase in our prices was made recently and this catalogue gives full particulars.

Quick judgment plus quick action—

—was the success formula of P. D. Armour, one of the greatest business geniuses in America.

The successful generals are using it today on the battle-fields of Europe; and it's a formula that works just as well in the greenhouse business as it ever did in the packing house business or the war game.

You owe much of your success to this formula—you use it every day—so do the other successful men that read this page. And here's another chance for you to use it.

Regular price $2.35 a gal.

Special $2.10 a gal.

Cash with order $2.00

You save 35c per gal.

YOU don't want to mark down the market value of your greenhouse with CHEAP paint. You want the OUTSIDE of YOUR greenhouse to indicate the grade of stock you grow INSIDE—the very highest.

Use the same quick judgment in buying your paint that you do in cutting your stock—you don't wait until it's too late. Use the same quick action in buying your paint that you do in getting your stock to market—you don't rest till it's there.

A fixed amount of American Snow White Paint has been set aside by us to be sold at cost—$2.10 a gallon, with an additional discount of 5% for cash with order. Here's your chance for quick judgment plus quick action.

You'll need
American Simon Pure Putty, too.

The only difference between American Simon Pure Putty and other putties is the fact that it contains just what it should contain and nothing else. All other putties don't always live up to this high standard. All greenhouse putty should contain just 83% No. 1 Whiting, 1% best white lead and 16% boiled oil. You'll find just this in American Simon Pure—and you'll find nothing else.

100-lb. tin, $3.35 50-lb. tin, $1.75 25-lb. tin, 90c

COLD WEATHER

Geo. Valker's Range at Minot, N. D.

Last summer we built some greenhouses, a large brick service building and installed two power boilers and complete vacuum heating system for Mr. George Valker, at Minot, N. D.

Today, right in the midst of a "below-zero" spell of weather, Mr. Valker paid us a visit, wearing his usual bright smile.

Naturally during this cold weather, when a great many florists are having trouble with their heating systems, we asked Mr. Valker if he wasn't a bit worried about his greenhouses.

"Not in the least," was his instant reply. "The heating system has given such perfect satisfaction that, although we have had the thermometer as low as 35° below zero, we had no difficulty at all in maintaining our temperature."

Just give us a chance on your greenhouse problems; you will not be disappointed.

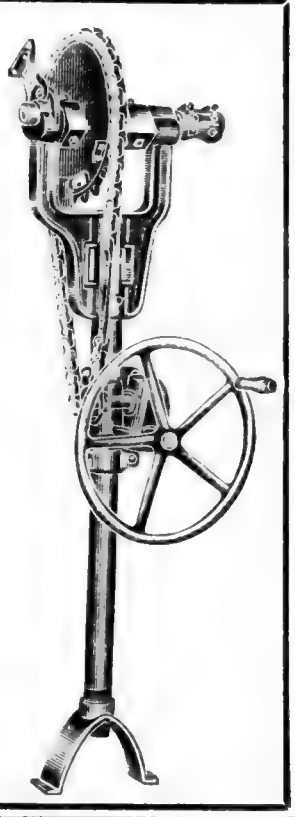
MOST POWERFUL MACHINE IN THE WORLD and with 20th Century Arm and Roller Bearing Hanger it makes the Evans Challenge the BEST that is built

John A. Evans Co., Richmond, Ind. Columbus, Ohio, Dec. 14, 1916.



Gentlemen:

We have used your 20th Century Arm ever since you began to manufacture it, and while we have a large number in constant use, we take pleasure in saying that they give entire satisfaction, and we do not hesitate to say that it is superior in every respect to any other ventilating machine that we have ever used. The Double Acting 20th Century Arm we will say is the last word in ventilating machines. With our very best wishes, we are

Yours very truly,

LOUISA POCKETT

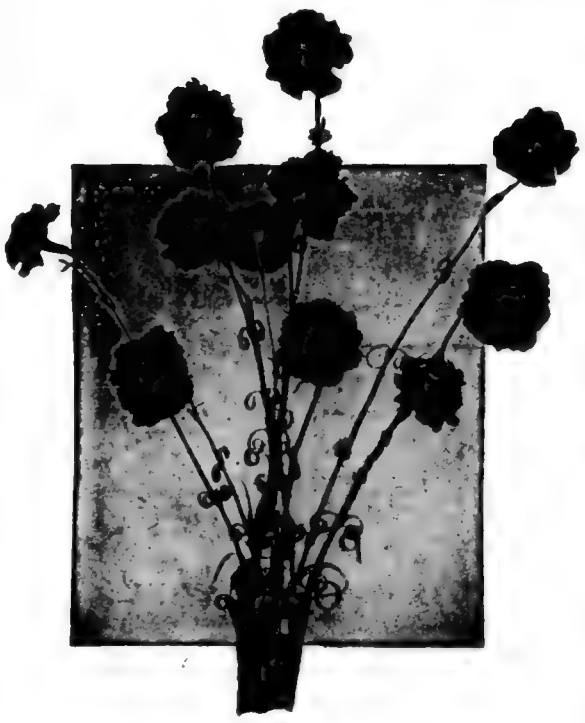
is the name of a

New Chrysanthemum

that is announced by its raiser, Mr. Pockett, as being

Superior in Every Way to Wm. Turner

of which it is a seedling. Since he raised both varieties, we may safely take his word for it. Louisa Pockett is larger than Turner; a better shape and as strong a grower as Marigold. We have 3000 plants ready for immediate delivery from 2½-inch pots, which if set out in the benches now will make ideal stock plants to propagate from. You must eventually have this variety—why not buy it now?



Also: Nag-ir-roc, W. H. Waite, Bol d'Or and President Everitt, our other Chrysanthemum Novelties for delivery at this time.

Trade Prices: $1.60 plant; $16.00 dozen; $100.00 hundred.

Merry Christmas

THE BEST RED

What are you going to plant for red this year? is a question confronting every grower of carnations. Perhaps we can help you solve it. Naturally you want to plant a winner. In the 100 scarlet class at the A. C. S. exhibition, there were eight entries, embracing practically all the new and standard varieties, and easily the most representative class in the whole show. Our Merry Christmas topped them all, establishing itself as the peer of all scarlet carnations. That ought to help you in making your choice. If you want to be convinced as to its productiveness, come and see it growing. It's the only red we shall grow in quantity next year. February 20th delivery, $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

DORNER'S NOVELTIES for 1917

NEW CARNATIONS

ROSALIA—Cerise pink, large three and one-half inch flower of a true cerise pink color. Form is perfect. Calyx strong, never bursting. Stem is at all times strong and wiry. The growth is far above the average when we consider vigor, health and early and free flowering qualities. ROSALIA is a decided improvement on ROSETTE, having a better color and a better commercial habit.

OLD GOLD—We offer this as the earliest and most free flowering yellow carnation we have yet produced. A decided improvement over YELLOW PRINCE, being of a stronger growth, is perfectly clean and healthy, produces larger stems and more bloom. The color is a deep yellow with faint pink stripes.

The above two varieties, Price: $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000

NEW LATE CHRYSANTHEMUM

FALL BEAUTY—A large Japanese reflex of a pleasing pink color with a shading of deep cream to the base of the petals and center of the flower. Has an extra strong stem, is especially fine for Thanksgiving, maturing November 25th to December 10th. The color, combined with its being so late and its extra keeping qualities, makes it of especial commercial value.

Price: $3.50 per doz.; $30.00 per 100

FOR YOUR PROTECTION, MR. FLORIST,

EXTRACTS FROM OUR ENDORSEMENTS

Pittsburgh Cut Flower Co., of Pittsburgh, Pa., writes: "Your 'Superiora' Magnolia Leaves are the best leaves that we have ever handled, and we have had no complaint from any of our customers who bought these leaves from us. We have stored these leaves under all conditions and found that they will not mould; it is a very satisfactory leaf indeed."

W. Q. Potter Co., successor to the McCallum Co., of Cleveland, O., states: "Your 'Superiora' Magnolia Leaves are of the highest obtainable quality and second to none, such as has never been on the market before, for they are all of a one uniform size, which is the main thing in the making of wreaths. Also your leaves are uniform in color, which gives the finished wreath a rich tone quality, and this gets the results for the florists. Up to now all imitators of your leaves have failed in producing a quality which is worth mentioning. Every wholesale florist who wants to protect his trade should sell only your product. We have found that you have kept up the quality always, and we hope that you will continue to do so. The florists are willing to pay a few cents more per case on your goods, which are really cheaper in comparison with any other brands which are flooding the markets from time to time."

Jos. G. Neidinger Co., of Philadelphia, Pa., says: "We have tried all the Magnolia Leaves that are offered, but find your leaves to be far superior to all others, etc., etc."

The Barteldes Seed Store, of Denver, Colo., writes: "In regard to the quality of the 'Superiora' brand of Magnolia Leaves, we take pleasure in advising that we have found all of these leaves which we received from you to be of an even size and medium length. Both the size and the length being extremely uniform. They have also reached us in pliable condition, and altogether we have been quite well satisfied with them."

The Kervan Co., of New York City, writes: "We have handled your Magnolia leaves for several years and we take pleasure in announcing that our already long list of satisfied customers continues to grow. Since we have handled your leaves we have never had a complaint, but before that there was dissatisfaction."

The Montreal Floral Exchange, Montreal, Canada, writes: "Our business has increased with you this year over double of what we purchased last season, which is a good recommendation in itself that the trade in Canada appreciates the durability and keeping qualities of your leaf. We appreciate the integrity, promptness and good business methods that have characterized all your dealings with us."

The Wm. Murphy Co., of Cincinnati, O., writes: "We find your 'Superiora' Magnolia Leaves the best product of the kind we have ever sold, and we take pleasure in congratulating you on same and recommending them to all in need of a first-class satisfactory leaf."

B. E. & J. T. Cokely, of Scranton, Pa., write: "We have always considered your Magnolia Leaves to be a standard for quality, etc."

The Baltimore Wholesale Florist and Supply Co., of Baltimore, Md., writes: "We are confident that any other manufactured Magnolia Leaves could not compete with yours, as other brands have been offered us, which, after we tried them, we refused to carry in stock."

N. F. McCarthy & Co., of Boston, Mass., write: ". . . It is the opinion of McCarthy & Co. that your good firm prepares the best leaf that has yet been offered in the United States. It is well worth the difference between the prices offered by inferior manufacturers and your agents."

Jos. Ziska & Sons, of Chicago, Ill., write: "We feel that you are entitled to a compliment on the good quality of your 'Superiora' brand Magnolia Leaves. We have handled these goods for a long time—in fact, we believe that we are one of the first handlers of your goods here in Chicago, and must say that we have as yet to get a return of your merchandise. Even buyers that were always accustomed to buying the foreign brands realize and admit that your leaves are far superior."

The Cleveland Florists' Exchange, Cleveland, O., says: ". . . never as yet have we had a complaint on the 'Superiora' brand of Magnolia Leaves, nor a carton returned."

Smith & Young Co., of Indianapolis, Ind., writes: "We will continue to use 'Superiora' exclusively as we consider it superior to any other leaf in the market. Since we handle 'Superiora' we have not had one single complaint, etc., etc."

The Leo Niessen Co., of Philadelphia, Pa., says: "To the best of our knowledge your leaves are of the best quality and as good as we can get in the market."

The Cleveland Cut Flower Co., of Cleveland, Ohio, writes: ". . . that we have been sending you orders for 'Superiora' brand Magnolia Leaves for several years should prove that we like your goods . . ."

Michigan Cut Flower Exchange, Detroit, Mich., says: "We have been handling your 'Superiora' Magnolia Leaves for the past six years and find in all this time that we have had no complaints but many compliments on these goods., etc., etc."

Jos. E. Koppelman, of Providence, R. I., writes: "We feel that we can sell your leaves to people who have used them once without any trouble. They rather pay the difference than to buy other leaves elsewhere, etc., etc."

McAlpine & McDonald, of Boston, Mass., write: "In answer to your letter of January 5th, requesting our endorsement on 'Superiora' Magnolia Leaves, would say that you might put us down as saying that we have found them a most satisfactory leaf in every respect, our trade being well pleased with them. We also wish to say that our business dealings with the Dr. H. Dux Co. have been the finest ever."

New England Florist Supply Co., of Boston, Mass., writes: "Have found 'Superiora' Magnolias the best leaves on the market. The sales on this leaf have been growing with the same rapidity as our business."

Wm. F. Kasting Co., of Buffalo, N. Y., writes: "Have always found that the 'Superiora' brand gives our customers entire satisfaction; in fact, they are the best leaves we have been able to obtain in the last few years."

Russin & Hanfling, of New York City, write: "In response to your letter of recent date, it gives us great pleasure to state that we have been very much satisfied with the quality of your 'Superiora' brand Magnolia Leaves. We have tried the Magnolias of several other manufacturers, but in consequence we find your leaves to be pre-eminent to all others placed upon the market, particularly with the view that your leaves are all of one uniform color, as well as being pliable and non-moulding."

Henry M. Robinson & Co., of Boston, Mass., write: "We are pleased to state that the quality of your leaves is certainly the best ever manufactured in this country, and it is a pleasure to offer such stock for sale, etc."

Reed & Keller, of New York City, say: ". . . and we beg leave to acknowledge receipt of your last shipment of Magnolias, and we are indeed pleased to say that they are superior in every way. We further state that our experience in leaves from other dealers has been very unsatisfactory; colors vary and leaves mould quickly, etc."

The Dale Estate, of Brampton, Ont., writes: "We are glad to state that any 'Superiora' leaves that we have had in the past were always as reported and gave satisfaction in our business."

Geo. H. Angermueller, of St. Louis, Mo., says: "It pleases me to say that I have worked up a splendid business on your 'Superiora' Magnolia Leaves, and I credit my success to the fact that the quality of your leaves has always been entirely satisfactory to my customers, etc."

Oscar Leistner, of Chicago, Ill., writes: ". . . As you know, before you gave us the sole agency for the Western country, we were handling a different leaf, but these leaves gave us no end of trouble and our customers were very much disappointed with the quality. Since we have been handling your leaves we find that the complaints from our customers have entirely disappeared, and the trade seems anxious to buy your leaves exclusively. Only today one of our customers told us that he had bought 100 cartons of Magnolias from one of your competitors, but that he has been compelled to return them, as his customers absolutely refused to accept them, due to the fact that the leaves are 'off-color' as well as mouldy, etc."

New York Florists' Supply Co., of New York City, writes: "Since we have been handling your 'Superiora' Magnolia Leaves we have had no complaints about the quality, and can assure you that in our judgment they are fully up to the standard of the best imported."

C. E. Critchell, of Cincinnati, Ohio, writes: "My customers insist on having the 'Superiora' brand of Magnolias, as they claim these are the best, and that they do not dry out or become mouldy, and that every leaf can be used, and when this is taken into consideration, they are also the cheapest, besides being the best."

The McCallum Co., of Pittsburgh, Pa., says: "Other Magnolia preparers have tried to induce us to stock up their goods 'just as good as Dux's' at a cheaper price, but we have in each instance told them frankly that it was a case of quality with us, and that we did not think their leaf would give the satisfaction yours did. We consider our Magnolia trade one of the best assets of our business and will not take a chance of losing it; in fact, our traveling men are often greeted as 'Magnolia Kings.'"

L. Baumann & Co., of Chicago, Ill., write: "We regard your 'Superiora' Magnolia Leaves as being unequaled and certainly would not want to have anything else. Your leaves need no recommendation—they speak for themselves."

THE FLORISTS' REVIEW

WHOSE INTERESTS ARE PARAMOUNT?

There is sure to be radical divergence of opinion as to excluding plant imports—"it makes a great deal of difference whose ox is gored"—but a quarantine unquestionably will be a powerful influence in the development of American products, to encourage which the S. A. F. has a standing committee.

By CHARLES WILLIS WARD,
Chairman S. A. F. Committee on Development of American Products.

UNDER the heading, "Here's Another Menace," in The Review for January 18, which has just reached me here at Eureka, Cal., the editor has opened the discussion on a question of the utmost importance to the future welfare of the horticultural, nursery and florists' interests of this continent.

The nursery and florists' trade of America will do well to take into consideration and early prepare for a federal embargo prohibiting the importation of all florists' plants and nursery stock except under the most stringent restrictions.

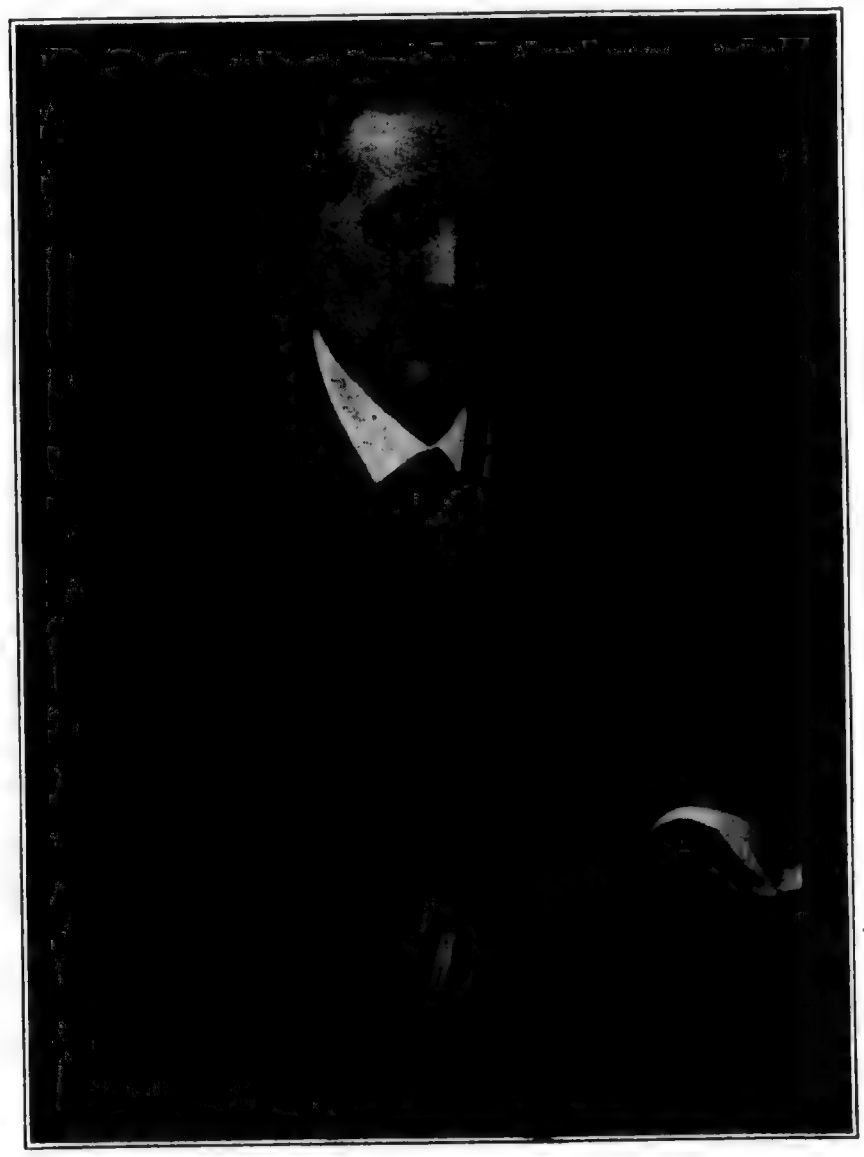
This embargo, in my opinion, will be justified upon the ground of the enormous losses already sustained by the above mentioned industries and by the people generally, caused by the distribution of San Jose scale, gipsy and brown tail moth, citrus white fly, black and purple scale, citrus canker, chestnut fungus, hickory wireworm, white pine blister rust and many other pests from foreign lands, the losses already caused to this country far exceeding the total value of all the imports of plants of every description during the last sixty years.

Some Examples.

The loss from San Jose scale alone to the fruit growing and nursery business of America may be counted at $500,000,000 since its importation from Japan. The loss from the gipsy and brown-tail moth bids fair to exceed $100,000,000 before the pest may be controlled. The loss to the potato growers of the United States, caused by letting loose the potato bug from its narrow valley in Colorado, will probably exceed $1,000,000,000 during the last sixty years. The loss to citrus growers of Florida, Louisiana, Mississippi, Texas and California, ensuing from the introduction of purple scale, black scale and citrus white fly, will run into hundreds of millions of dollars and eventually destroy the American citrus industry unless some positive means of control can be found.

Citrus canker, lately imported from Japan into Florida and Louisiana, already threatens the elimination of the orange and grape fruit as commercial crops in those states.

Blister Rust and Hickory Worm.



Already California has placed an absolute prohibitive embargo upon the importation into the state of citrus plants or fruit of any kind from Japan, Florida, Mississippi, Alabama, Louisiana or Texas.

The latest importation from foreign lands, the white pine blister rust, is bound to annihilate one of our most valued timber trees and most beautiful coniferous evergreens unless some now unknown means is found to prevent its phenomenally rapid spread. Billions of dollars could never replace the loss of Pinus Strobus to the American continent.

Already the chestnut fungus has destroyed the chestnut forests of Long Island, and for 100 miles up the Hudson. Pennsylvania is rapidly losing her chestnut forests and the disease has attacked the chestnuts of West Virginia and southwestern Virginia. In twenty years more America will have lost her last native chestnut if some means now unknown is not discovered to check the spread of the disease.

The hickory wireworm has destroyed every hickory tree on the Cottage Gardens wooded lot at Queens, L. I., during the last four years and in five years more not a single live hickory tree will be found on all Long Island and probably New Jersey as well.

The introduction of the coddling moth into the state of Michigan wiped out apple raising as an industry for nearly two decades.

Chestnut Fungus.

Perhaps my own experience with the chestnut fungus on Long Island may be interesting. In 1900 the Cottage Gardens wooded lot of eighty acres boasted of some 200 to 300 handsome native chestnuts, bearing bountiful annual crops of splendid nuts.

In 1901 we imported a few small Japan chestnuts from the orient. The next season I noticed some curious burned tips on the young, succulent growth. The next year all the imported trees were dead and for the first time I noticed the burned tips on some of the native chestnuts in the edge of the forest. In another year these native trees also were dead and five years afterward every chestnut tree on the entire eighty acres had been destroyed. And today there is no known method to check the disease. Four years ago two or three hickory trees suddenly died, without any apparent reason. Today

Perhaps my own experience with the chestnut fungus on Long Island may be interesting. In 1900 the Cottage Gardens wooded lot of eighty acres boasted of some 200 to 300 handsome native chestnuts, bearing bountiful annual crops of splendid nuts.

In 1901 we imported a few small Japan chestnuts from the orient. The next season I noticed some curious burned tips on the young, succulent growth. The next year all the imported trees were dead and for the first time I noticed the burned tips on some of the native chestnuts in the edge of the forest. In another year these native trees also were dead and five years afterward every chestnut tree on the entire eighty acres had been destroyed. And today there is no known method to check the disease. Four years ago two or three hickory trees suddenly died, without any apparent reason. Today not a live hickory remains on the place. The newly imported hickory wireworm has taken them all. And so the story of the introduction of foreign insect pests and diseases might be continued.

At the beginning of the war of the Rebellion, the islands of Bermuda were noted for their production of early peaches, pears and other fruits, which were shipped to the larger cities of the United States. During the war a blockade runner left a cargo of potatoes on the island. From these potatoes were hatched some flies never before seen on the island of Bermuda. These insects afterwards became known as the fruit fly, for the reason that within a few years not a single variety of fruit except the banana could be grown on the island. The fruit flies destroyed them all; and the agricultural crops of Bermuda were soon confined to early potatoes, Bermuda onions and Harrisii lilies.

A Paramount Issue.

Shall the nursery and florists' interests of America continue to import these disastrously destructive pests and diseases, or shall this country grow its own supply of such foreign material as may be essential to carry on the business?

This question has now become of paramount importance.

The best that can be said of a large percentage of this imported material is that the American grower gets plants in an inferior condition a little cheaper than a better class of stock can be produced at home. Having become accustomed to purchasing such imported stock, the American lazily continues it under the erroneous belief that nothing else can be done.

The reasons are many why America should grow the great bulk of her own fruit and rose stocks, azaleas, boxwood, rhododendrons, coniferous and broad-leaved evergreens and many other items now imported, and as soon as nurserymen and florists awaken to the possibilities of their own country the importation of such stock will in a great measure cease.

Rose Stocks in California.

California rose growers have long produced their own canina and Manetti stocks, and certain California nurseries have long grown their own Mariana and Mazzard stocks. What would one think of a nurseryman who imported his peach stocks for budding instead of planting the Carolina pits and growing them himself?

Carnations originally came from Europe. Who would look to Europe now for carnation plants to grow in America? California grapes originally came from France and Spain. Who will go to those countries for grape vines to plant a vineyard today?

As it is with those things today, so may it be with ninety per cent of the nursery and florists' stock now imported into this country, whenever American energy and American capital set out to produce them.

Encourage Home Industry.

If other industries are deserving of encouragement and protection, is there any reason why these industries do not deserve like treatment? Woolen goods bring no disastrous diseases or pests to destroy billions of dollars of property. Nevertheless, woolen goods pay a duty almost equal to the foreign value of the article imported.

Why fume and rage and grow purple in the face over the few hundreds of thousands of annual profits made by importers of foreign plant material and ignore the enormous losses caused by the pests brought in with this imported stuff?

Whose interests are paramount, the plant importers' or the horticultural industries of America?

RETAIL STORE MANAGEMENT

WHAT THE LEADERS IN THE TRADE ARE DOING

THE RECORD ORDER.

The Largest Telegraph Delivery.

This is the story of perhaps the most elaborate funeral design ever ordered by telegraph of one of the advertisers in The Review's Telegraph Delivery Department.

There probably never has been so good an illustration of the perfection of the telegraph delivery service as it exists today.

The order recently was sent by a florist at St. Louis to James Hayes, at Topeka, Kan., who found that he had six hours in which to complete the design. It should be a matter of great satisfaction to florists in general to contemplate the fact that so elaborate a piece can be delivered in a distant city in such an exceedingly brief time.

A study of the illustration will make it clear that this was an occupational design, for the funeral of an actor. The inscription is "Final Curtain" and the design represents a stage with the curtain down. The piece was seven and one-half feet long and four and one-half feet high. The columns at the side were made by winding the wire frame with chenille. The curtain was of smilax. Carnations and sweet peas were the flowers used and Mr. Hayes employed just enough of them to create the right effect. Too many flowers used in the embellishment would have obscured the idea.

Worth a "Century" or More.

Mr. Hayes says that he believes this will be a design new to nearly all florists and he recommends that wherever another piece of this character may be wanted, the florist figure on charging $100 for it, or more if higher priced flowers are to be used, for the work involved is considerable.

"It would be a good thing," says Mr. Hayes, "to make mention of the progressiveness of the trade in general in the matter of transferring orders by telegraph. A few years ago such a thing as the execution of this order would have been impossible, but now through the medium of the telegraph we can deliver anything, almost anywhere, at any time."

ADVERTISING BY RETAILERS.

[An address by David Schein, of Nashville, before the recent meeting of the Tennessee State Florists' Association.]

Before going into a detailed discussion of advertising appropriations and mediums, I would like to call your attention to some of the most vital factors in advertising.

A local banker who had charge of the advertising for his institution was asked to give his views on advertising. Here is the statement he made: "Frankly, I have my advertising sold to me. If the seller is capable and honest I do really good advertising." My experience leads me to believe that the average florist has his advertising sold to him.

First: What is advertising? Advertising is influencing the minds of people. It is making others think as you desire. It means utilizing all those forces which produce impressions and crystallize opinions. It is the creating of prestige, that quality which causes others to accept a statement without question.

Florist's Personality Productive Factor.

Producing these impressions is by no means confined to printed or painted advertisements. The life that a business man leads, both public and private, has much to do with the molding of public opinion and favor. A successful florist must be a public-spirited, clean-living, well known and well liked person. No business is more influenced by personality than that of the florist.

Next in importance to a bright, clean personality is a bright, clean store. Does your store invite people to come in, or to stay out? Does your store smile at passers-by with 200-candle-power mazdas and cheerful windows, or is your front an illustration for a hard-luck story? Think it over. The biggest advertising opportunity that the average retailer has is the lighting and display possibilities in his own store.

Advertising's Better Half.

When you determine as to the most suitable advertising methods for your own business, please remember that no advertising will survive or become remunerative unless it is substantiated by merit of merchandise, service and the dependability of your promise. In other words, you've got to "make good" what you advertise, or you are wasting your advertising appropriation. You cannot fool the public permanently. The merchant who is building for permanency strives to create and maintain those impressions which will make people accept his statements at face value, regardless of the quantity of space that is expended on any particular announcement or statement.

Before deciding what advertising mediums you are going to use, you should determine how much you can appropriate for advertising purposes. If a florist does $50,000 or more gross business per year, he should allow between two and one-half and three per cent of the gross amount for advertising. If his business runs below that amount the appropriation is largely dependent upon such circumstances as strength of competition, location of store, overhead, production cost and capacity.

Analytic Advertising Reduces Risk.

The next step is to systematically lay out your advertising. Take a calendar at the beginning of each year; mark the seasons and holidays that are of importance; decide as to their relative value from a business standpoint and divide your appropriation accordingly.

As an example, take St. Valentine's day. If your appropriation is $1,000 per year, $75 should be ample for advertising St. Valentine's day. By the way, men buy flowers for valentines, so do not ask your newspaper man to put the valentine ad on the society page. The sporting or financial pages are more apt to bring results on this particular occasion.

The advertiser who says, "I only use newspapers," is just as wrong as the man who claims, "Only letters bring results." In order to get the most out of advertising, a merchant must study the market he wants to reach, the purposes he wants to accomplish and the relative values of the different mediums. I give you now the accepted relative importance of advertising mediums, for florists' purposes.

Medium.	Per cent.
Newspaper	35
Direct mail	25
Street car and billboards	15
Novelties, calendars, etc.	10
Programs, school papers, charity advertising.	15
Total	100

Tennessee Needs Publicity's Punch.

I want to give you some figures that I believe will interest you. During the year 1916 the following amounts were spent, per capita, for advertising in the United States:

Territory.	Per capita.
North Atlantic states	$13.10
Western states	11.93
North central states	6.97
South Atlantic states	3.34
South central states	2.56

Tennessee is one of the south central states. Compare the prosperity of this state with the wealth in the states in which more advertising is done—judge for yourself whether we are advertising as much as we ought to.

Advertising is divided into two classes, direct and general. Direct advertising embraces that by mail, telephone, telegraph and personal solicitation; general advertising is done through newspapers, magazines, billboards, street cars and other mediums of general notice.

If you have a proposition which cannot possibly appeal to more than—say—1,000 people in your section, then you should use the mails extensively. Your newspaper and other general advertising influences all of the people and supports the single shots which you fire direct by mail.

Newspaper Ads; Helpful Hints.

Important in making your newspaper advertising effective is the creating of individuality. This can be done in any or all of the following ways: Distinctive signature cut, special type, borders, location, slogans and peculiar phraseology of copy.

Make up your mind as to what you want to say in your newspaper ad; then say it quickly and plainly. Make your newspaper or other ads pleasant reading for intelligent people. I do not believe it is good policy for a florist to advertise cheapness. Flowers are a gift of sentiment, and no woman is going to appreciate a corsage from Smith's store if that corsage was advertised in the morning paper at a basement bargain price.

Many florists use small cards in the newspapers the year around. I seriously question the benefit of this style of advertising. Let each of your newspaper ads bear a message of interest and not merely your name and address. There are some good series of ads offered by florists' syndicates, and any one who is not able to write good copy himself, or secure the service of an experienced ad writer, is much better off in renting a syndicate service of this kind.

Direct Advertising.

The foremost essential in direct advertising is the preparation of the mailing list. Mailing lists are prepared according to either the financial rating, social position, occupation or location of the prospects.

A good list for a florist is found in what is known as a "blue book," a list comprising the names of social leaders. In a city like Nashville we have a list of this kind of about 1,000 names. Then there are special lists of church members, society members and those affiliated with commercial organizations.

A mailing list on index cards is handled to best advantage, on account of the space that each card gives you for record and follow-up information. After you have prepared your mailing lists, the postmaster of your respective cities will, upon request, check them and correct them at a small cost, thus saving you waste postage on wrong addresses.

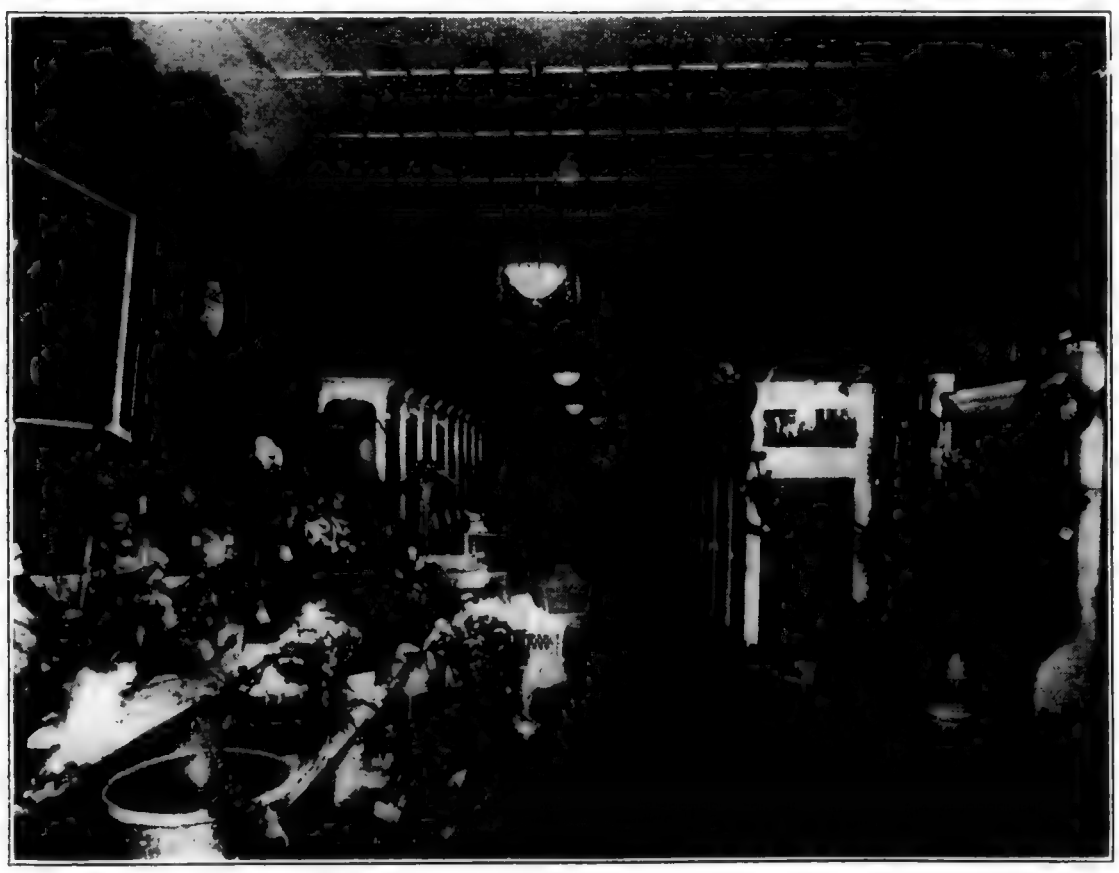
Should Watch for Functions.

While a progressive florist should use his mailing list in full or in part at least four times per year, the individual letters sent on special occasions, such as graduations, weddings or receptions, are the ones that bring the biggest results, if they are well arranged. It is good policy for you to have a good letter prepared for each of these purposes, or, better yet, have a quantity of them neatly multigraphed. Then your assistant can fill them in each day from the social calendar in the newspaper and other available sources.

There are many attractive envelope "stuffers" prepared by syndicate advertising firms and these are good for the florists who have only a small list and cannot afford to go to the expense of specially designed and printed matter. Whenever possible, special matter carrying the individuality of the advertiser is much to be preferred.

I wish I had the time to discuss more intimately the merits of the many other productive advertising mediums, such as billboards, street-car cards, novelties, moving picture screens, etc. They all have their place in a well planned advertising campaign. I shall, however, be glad to attempt to answer any question that you may ask me in connection with my subject.

FORTUNE FAVORS FORTER.



The grower by his greenhouse, the man by his apparel, the merchant by his store—so judges the world. It is the quality of the thing most intimately associated with a man that more or less determines his worldly rating. For instance, going from platitudes to a specific example, take the store of Edward A. Forter, of Cincinnati, O., as shown in the accompanying illustration. This store stamps the owner as alert, wide-awake and up-to-the-minute in his merchandising, choosing the best and dealing with the best. It advertises its owner; it advertises itself.

Mr. Forter succeeded A. Sunderbruch's Sons last year and the picture was taken during the opening last Easter at 128 West Fourth street, Cincinnati. The floor space has an area of 5,200 square feet. A glass-enclosed cooler in the rear is forty-nine feet long, twenty-five feet wide and twelve feet high, the finest of its kind to be had. Mr. Forter evidently is courting success with every advantage at his disposal.

AZALEAS A SECOND SEASON.

Please tell me how to take care of my azaleas after they are through blooming. Will they be of any use for next season? D. D. S.—Tex.

Azaleas after flowering should have all their seed pods removed. You can either plant them out in summer on a piece of land where the hose is handy and lift them in late September, or carry them over in pots. The pots should be plunged to their brims in a coldframe or regular plunging bed. You must have water convenient in either case. Azaleas like a light compost, with, if possible, considerable leaf-mold in it. While they are specially fond of peat, they will grow almost equally well in loam. Carried-over azaleas set buds more abundantly than the imported ones, and the plants also will flower earlier than the same varieties fresh from Belgium. C. W.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

Meeting of Executive Board.

President Robert C. Kerr authorizes me to call a meeting of the executive board to be held in New York, March 16 and 17, 1917.

The August Convention.

The arrangements for the trade exhibition in connection with the convention to be held in New York next August are progressing satisfactorily. The florists' supply trade and others doing business with growers and retailers are evincing a keen interest in the exhibition, as will be seen by the following list of those who have already reserved space on the exhibition floor: John Scheepers & Co., George L. Stillman, B. Hammond Tracy, John Lewis Childs, Arthur Cowee, Schloss Bros., Bayersdorfer & Co., Reed & Keller, Arthur T. Boddington Co., John C. Moninger Co., John A. Evans Co., Advance Co., King Construction Co., Jackson & Perkins Co., American Greenhouse Mfg. Co., Lord & Burnham Co. and Russin & Hanfling. A large attendance of representatives of the trade from all sections of the country is assured. Consequently the trade exhibition will be unusually large.

The Convention Garden, which has been laid out in the Botanical Gardens, Bronx park, under the supervision of Dr. N. L. Britton, is an undertaking worthy of New York. Preparatory work was engaged in until the ground became too much frozen to make the continuation possible. Besides serving the purpose of the society, the garden will be an object of interest to hundreds of thousands of the public, all horticultural enthusiasts. With this in view Dr. Britton has spared no effort to make the garden attractive. So far the following have arranged for plantings: W. A. Manda, Maurice Fuld, John Scheepers & Co., Bobbink & Atkins, Henry A. Dreer, A. N. Pierson, Inc., Conard & Jones, John Lewis Childs, Raymond W. Swett, Arthur Cowee, B. Hammond Tracy and Arthur T. Boddington Co.

The Proceedings of the society will be mailed to members about February 20. Conditions without the control of the society have caused some little delay in the publication of the volume this year, but it will be worthy of close study, being more than usually interesting. One thing, particularly, the society is to be congratulated upon; the list of members in good standing published in the book is much larger than ever before recorded in the history of the society. John Young, Sec'y.

VEGETABLES AND FRUITS DEPARTMENT

PESTS ON LETTUCE PLANTS.

I have a good bed of lettuce, but green flies have settled on the plants. These I keep under control by using tobacco smoke, but now a white insect has made its home on the stalks and on the ground. It is not the white fly that attacks fuchsias; it has no wings. How can I get rid of it and prevent its future appearance? W. F.—Pa.

I would like to see one of the wingless flies which trouble your lettuce plants. I cannot think what it can be. Mealy bug is white, but would hardly thrive in a lettuce house temperature. If you have mealy bugs on your lettuce, they can be killed by hydrocyanic acid gas, but I would hesitate to advise any beginner to use this remedy, extreme caution being necessary on account of the acid's deadly qualities. Cannot you mail one or two of the insects in a small tin or wooden box? Give your lettuce a night temperature of 48 degrees and use a compost containing plenty of horse manure which is well incorporated with the soil.

C. W.

RED SPIDER ON CUCUMBERS.

Can you tell me how to get rid of red and green bugs on lettuce and cucumbers? I have fumigated the house by burning tobacco stems, but this does not seem to stamp out all the pests.

G. G. M.—O.

The red bugs you refer to probably are red spiders, a most destructive pest and one not easy to fight. Tobacco smoke has no effect on them. A too arid atmosphere is responsible for their presence. A force of water and a moist atmosphere are conditions distasteful to them. If red spider gets a secure foothold, it will be hard to exterminate. Use a fine spray nozzle and direct the water on the affected plants.

Green aphis are more easily destroyed. I would not use tobacco stems; as a fumigant tobacco stems now are wellnigh obsolete. Use one of the tobacco papers, like Nico-Fume, or even tobacco dust. These are effective, leave no nauseous odor behind them and are not liable to burn the foliage as tobacco stems often do. A light fumigation once a week will be a good policy and aphis will not trouble you. C. W.

LETTUCE TROUBLES.

Will you please tell me how to get rid of green flies on lettuce? I have used sulphur smoke, nicotine papers and airslaked lime, and have painted my pipes with sulphur, but without killing the flies. Would I spoil the lettuce plants if I were to spray them with nicotine while they are small? My lettuce is not doing well this year. The soil contains an even mixture of old soil, new soil from under the sod and rotted manure. I used the same kind of soil last year and could cut the lettuce every six weeks. The present crop has been in the benches about nine weeks, but so far only one bench has done fairly well. Can you tell me the reason for this condition? W. H. H.—Mo.

Green aphis below the foliage of lettuce is hard to dislodge, but fumigation on two successive nights with such a tobacco paper as Nico-Fume should clean them out. If this fails try evaporating Nicoticide, over lamps containing denatured alcohol. I would give the lettuce a spraying the morning after fumigation to prevent danger of burning the foliage. If you were to fumigate once a week your plants would not get in this condition. Painting the pipes with sulphur is all right for mildew, but not for green aphis. A painting with nicotine would be more effective. If you spray with nicotine, it would not be safe to use the plants for some time, as nicotine is a deadly poison.

I cannot tell you just why your lettuce plants have failed to do better. For one thing, plants infested with aphis will never amount to much. The temperature may not be correct. They should be run about 48 degrees at night; if warmer, green aphis will trouble them more. A good soil consists of well rotted pasture loam to which is added a liberal dressing of horse manure, which need not be fully rotted, but should be well incorporated with the soil. Careful ventilation is necessary to prevent leafburn, particularly when a bright day succeeds several sunless ones. C. W.

WHO'S WHO IN THE TRADE—AND WHY

GUNNAR J. TEILMANN.

IF any of a society's members are not far enough advanced in years to give the organization the benefit of wide experience, they may supply, instead, the infectious enthusiasm and up-to-date alertness of youth. Gunnar J. Teilmann, one of the active advocates of the Tennessee State Florists' Association, was born in May, 1895, at Westtown, Pa. His mother died in 1906. His father, Gunnar Teilmann, Sr., is a Dane and has been in the florists' trade since boyhood. While the father has been engaged in business, at Marion, Ind., and later at Johnson City, Tenn., the son has been imbibing knowledge in the schools and in the trade. To his high school education he has added a correspondence course in landscape gardening. He now has charge of the bookkeeping and a part of the sales department at his father's establishment in Johnson City.

Punxsutawney, Pa.—V. E. Carr reports steady and satisfactory business. He is proprietor of the East End Greenhouse, which is the oldest florists' establishment in this vicinity, although it did not come under Mr. Carr's management until a couple of years ago.

Saddle River, N. J.—John G. Esler says Assembly Bill No. 16 of the New Jersey legislature, to extend the corporate existence of the Florists' Hail Association for thirty years, has passed the House and is on the calendar of the Senate for action. Assemblyman Walter G. Winne was the sponsor for the measure and to him the F. H. A. is under obligation for the rapid passage of the bill through the lower house.

THE GLADIOLUS

GLADIOLUS PINK PERFECTION.

Many theologians have believed, and many still believe, in the doctrine of "perfectionism," or "Christian perfection," or "perfection of the saints." When told that perfection of character, in Christians or others, is an impossibility in this world of imperfections, these theologians have replied that there may be relative perfection, or degrees of perfection, or perfection of certain attributes, etc. By the way, if the present writer shows an imperfect knowledge of this doctrine, it is hoped that any theologically wise readers will be perfectly kind and considerate in their judgment. At any rate, it will be admitted that in common parlance and in horticultural speech, as well as in theological creeds, there are many sorts of perfection.

And perfection is surely not limited to any one color. In this case the perfection referred to is Pink Perfection, or the gladiolus which bears that name. Possibly the originator, when naming the flower, smilingly repeated to himself the familiar phrase, "It is the pink of perfection—the highest type of excellence." B. Hammond Tracy, of Cedar Acres fame, who furnished the photograph from which the illustration was made, says that Pink Perfection is "a truly wonderful gladiolus in color and texture, one of the choicest of the newer varieties. The color is a soft, clear pink of the La France shade. It bears large, open flowers, on a strong spike." Another grower describes the color as "a delicate apple-blossom pink, with a beautiful veining of salmon pink."

GLADIOLI FROM SEED.

I have collected a considerable quantity of gladiolus seeds this season. Will you kindly tell me when is the best time to sow them? Please state, also, whether clear sand or a mixture of soil and sand should be used, and give any other particulars about the treatment required. M. B.—N. J.

As the inquirer, probably, is fully aware, growing gladioli from seed is a tedious performance, but it is the only way to produce new varieties, if that is the intention.

After the gladiolus seeds have been collected, they should be carried over until the following spring. They may be sown in large pans of good, light soil, early in March, and placed in a warm greenhouse, and the seedlings may be thinned and allowed to remain in these receptacles during the first season. After the germination of the seeds, the flats should be removed to a lighter and airier position, so that the little plants may be gradually hardened and prepared to spend the summer outdoors. After the summer in the flats, the little corms should be ripened in the fall and stored like larger ones. Some of them may produce blooms the second year.

Perhaps a more common method, however, is to plant the seeds outdoors in shallow drills, covering them to a depth of an eighth of an inch or a little more. The tiny corms thus secured are housed for the winter and then planted in drills about an inch and a half deep, for a second season's growth. Few, if any, of them bear flowers the second summer; they must be lifted, stored and planted again before flowering satisfactorily. Thus the process is a slow one and the resultant flowers are a promiscuous and uncertain lot. A similar statement may be made about the bulbs raised from seed; they require three or four years to attain marketable size and then rank only as mixtures.

Gladiolus Pink Perfection.

SECOND-YEAR GLADIOLI FAIL.

Are the forcing gladioli, Blushing Bride and Peach Blossom, good for a second season? G. H. H.—Ill.

While Gladiolus Peach Blossom and others of the nanus type will have splendid bulbs when forced, much larger than those imported, I have found them to be almost worthless for forcing a second season, a small proportion of them only flowering. C. W.

CARRIED-OVER GLADIOLI.

In the winter of 1915-16 I bought some gladioli and benched them in a carnation house, hoping for good results. The varieties were America, Mrs. Francis King, Augusta and Chicago White. I benched over 200 and cut only about twenty-five spikes. I left them in the soil until July; then I lifted them and dried them off. They were a fine lot of large, sound bulbs. I wish to know whether I can force these bulbs this winter. The weather was so wet in 1915 that I think perhaps the bulbs did not ripen well. S. M.—Kan.

I see no reason why these gladioli should not be perfectly good for forcing again. I have tried such bulbs myself and had good results. Where the spikes have been cut down close to the ground, the bulbs, even if of good size, do poorly, but as the bulk of yours did not flower at all they should prove quite satisfactory. C. W.

CHEMICALS IN THE WATER.

In purifying our water, the water company uses four pounds of chloride of lime and ten pounds of alum to 400,000 gallons of water. Would this be harmful to greenhouse plants? If so, would it be equally harmful to outdoor plants and vegetables? L. C. B.—Kan.

I would not consider that the chemicals used would be likely to have an injurious effect upon greenhouse plants, especially as a large proportion of the chemicals would most likely be precipitated before the water would enter the mains. It is possible that in time a sufficient amount might accumulate in the bench soil to interfere with the growth of the plants, and it would then be necessary to remove the surface soil, but I do not think it likely that such a course would be necessary.

There would be less danger in the open ground, where the rains would wash anything that is soluble into the subsoil. T.

Brooklyn, N. Y.—E. R. Storey has been appointed sales manager of the Metropolitan Material Co., this to take effect March 1, 1917, on which date the company will remove to its new 10-acre plant at Flushing and Woodward avenues, Brooklyn. A special announcement to the trade from the Metropolitan Material Co. will be made later.

Jackson, Mich.—A fire which started from an oil stove did considerable damage to the A. W. Furnival & Son establishment February 6. The greenhouse to which the fire was confined was badly gutted and much of the stock in this house was a total loss. The store interior was damaged by the smoke, but not enough to interfere with business, says A. W. Furnival. Insurance was carried on the buildings.

ORCHIDS

Raising Cattleya Seedlings.

February and March are suitable months in which to make sowings of seeds of cattleyas and other orchids. Only a few specialists are as yet doing this work and they are in the main devoting their energies to raising hybrids. We have a bewildering multiplicity of these already and the end is not nearly in sight. What we need, however, is that one or two growers break away from the work of cross breeding and raise seedlings in quantities of the standard cattleyas, especially C. labiata, which becomes scarcer and smaller each year.

To raise orchid seedlings successfully, a warm, moist house is needed. A glass case or cases must be provided, in which pots containing fern fiber on which to sow the seeds are to be placed. Do not use any moss; it makes too much growth and smothers the seedlings. Coarse bath toweling or burlap stretched across the inside of the cases I have found good for seedling raising; also, pots filled with fern fiber and the tops covered with burlap, tucked in well to make a firm, smooth and well rounded surface. The burlap should be moistened with a fine sprayer before the seed is sown.

Germinating the Seeds.

A close atmosphere and fine sprayings are necessary. Sprayings may be needed once or twice a day, according to the weather. Admit air sparingly at first, but do not keep the atmosphere too close, as that would promote a slimy growth on the seeded surfaces. Shade from all sunshine. As the tiny seedlings appear, a little air can be left on all night. To prevent damage from snails and other pests, all pots should be elevated on other pots, which stand in trays of water. The raising of orchid seedlings is fussy but interesting work and will some day become a considerable industry in America. Let us, however, have more seedlings of good commercial varieties of proven value and less of the bigeneric hybrids whose names and numbers are becoming bewildering.

Cattleya Schroederæ now has its sheaths well made up and while it proves less popular on the markets than C. labiata and C. Trianæ, it fills in a gap nicely until C. Mossiæ and C. Mendellii come in season. Give all these spring and early summer cattleyas a light position, so that the growths will be well ripened. You can shade heavily in winter and get plants of a rich, dark green color, but they will invariably flower disappointingly. If you are buying any freshly imported cattleyas, place your orders early. Supplies this season are more or less uncertain and, the demand being strong, all will not secure the plants they need.

A VALUABLE TRIANÆ PLANT.

Just figure it for yourself. Seventy-nine blooms, all on one Cattleya Trianæ plant! Seventy-nine blooms, each worth— Hold on there! We are going too fast. If you intend to figure it for yourself, you must place your own valuation on the blooms. What would they probably be worth in your market? In the florists' business there are many uncertainties—enough of them, one would think, to make a gambler feel at home in the trade—and among these uncertainties the prices must be included. Still, at any reasonable, average appraisement, a Trianæ plant with seventy-nine blooms would not be wasting space in the greenhouse. It would not be merely cumbering the ground, like the fruitless fig tree in sacred writ.

The 79-flowered Trianæ was grown at the Dale Estate, at Brampton, Ont., and W. G. Peacock, of that establishment, supplied the photograph from which the illustration was made. Of course so small a snapshot could not do full justice to the original, though the plant was tilted toward the camera at an angle that brought as many of the blooms as possible into view. Mr. Peacock is authority for the number of blooms. He remarks that the plant was a magnificent specimen, though only 4 years old. The grower of it says that in his thirty years of experience he has never seen a better sample of Cattleya Trianæ.

The grower does not say anything about his cultural methods; that might be a long story. At any rate, though two cooks use the same recipe and the same materials, one may concoct a dish so delicious as to deserve the name of angels' food, while the other may hand out a conglomeration so unpalatable or indigestible as to "drive a man to drink." And there is as much difference in growers as in cooks.

AMERICAN ROSE SOCIETY.

Executive Committee Meeting.

The executive committee of the American Rose Society met in Philadelphia February 8 to take up matters pertaining to the coming show. A list of names for judges was presented, and those on the list will be communicated with, requesting their services as judges at the spring exhibition.

The premium list is growing by the addition of special premiums, and the interest that is being taken to make this a great show certainly warrants the belief that there will be nothing lacking for a great, popular exhibition. The returns from the call for fifty per cent of the guarantee fund have been most satisfactory. Application was made for the registration of four new roses, which was submitted to the committee for report.

The Portland rose test garden, which has been receiving careful attention for several months, was brought forward, the discussion showing that January 11, at Portland, representatives of ninety-nine different organizations met, including members of the Royal Rosarians, Portland Rose Society, Portland Chamber of Commerce, Portland Floral Society, Rotary Club, Research Club, American Institute of Architects, Parents' and Teachers' Association, etc., who organized themselves into the Portland Association National Rose Test Garden.

THE GLADIOLUS

GLADIOLUS PINK PERFECTION.

Many theologians have believed, and many still believe, in the doctrine of "perfectionism," or "Christian perfection," or "perfection of the saints." When told that perfection of character, in Christians or others, is an impossibility in this world of imperfections, these theologians have replied that there may be relative perfection, or degrees of perfection, or perfection of certain attributes, etc. By the way, if the present writer shows an imperfect knowledge of this doctrine, it is hoped that any theologically wise readers will be perfectly kind and considerate in their judgment. At any rate, it will be admitted that in common parlance and in horticultural speech, as well as in theological creeds, there are many sorts of perfection.

And perfection is surely not limited to any one color. In this case the perfection referred to is Pink Perfection, or the gladiolus which bears that name. Possibly the originator, when naming the flower, smilingly repeated to himself the familiar phrase, "It is the pink of perfection—the highest type of excellence." B. Hammond Tracy, of Cedar Acres fame, who furnished the photograph from which the illustration was made, says that Pink Perfection is "a truly wonderful gladiolus in color and texture, one of the choicest of the newer varieties. The color is a soft, clear pink of the La France shade. It bears large, open flowers, on a strong spike." Another grower describes the color as "a delicate apple-blossom pink, with a beautiful veining of salmon pink."

GLADIOLI FROM SEED.

I have collected a considerable quantity of gladiolus seeds this season. Will you kindly tell me when is the best time to sow them? Please state, also, whether clear sand or a mixture of soil and sand should be used, and give any other particulars about the treatment required. M. B. N. J.

As the inquirer, probably, is fully aware, growing gladioli from seed is a tedious performance, but it is the only way to produce new varieties, if that is the intention.

After the gladiolus seeds have been collected, they should be carried over until the following spring. They may be sown in large pans of good, light soil, early in March, and placed in a warm greenhouse, and the seedlings may be thinned and allowed to remain in these receptacles during the first season. After the germination of the seeds, the flats should be removed to a lighter and airier position, so that the little plants may be gradually hardened and prepared to spend the summer outdoors. After the summer in the flats, the little corms should be ripened in the fall and stored like larger ones. Some of them may produce blooms the second year.

Perhaps a more common method, however, is to plant the seeds outdoors in shallow drills, covering them to a depth of an eighth of an inch or a little more. The tiny corms thus secured are housed for the winter and then planted in drills about an inch and a half deep, for a second season's growth. Few, if any, of them bear flowers the second summer; they must be lifted, stored and planted again before flowering satisfactorily. Thus the process is a slow one and the resultant flowers are a promiscuous and uncertain lot. A similar statement may be made about the bulbs raised from seed; they require three or four years to attain marketable size and then rank only as mixtures.

Gladiolus Pink Perfection.

SECOND-YEAR GLADIOLI FAIL.

Are the forcing gladioli, Blushing Bride and Peach Blossom, good for a second season? G. H. H.—Ill.

While Gladiolus Peach Blossom and others of the nanus type will have splendid bulbs when forced, much larger than those imported, I have found them to be almost worthless for forcing a second season, a small proportion of them only flowering. C. W.

CARRIED-OVER GLADIOLI.

In the winter of 1915-16 I bought some gladioli and benched them in a carnation house, hoping for good results. The varieties were America, Mrs. Francis King, Augusta and Chicago White. I benched over 200 and cut only about twenty-five spikes. I left them in the soil until July; then I lifted them and dried them off. They were a fine lot of large, sound bulbs. I wish to know whether I can force these bulbs this winter. The weather was so wet in 1915 that I think perhaps the bulbs did not ripen well. S. M.—Kan.

I see no reason why these gladioli should not be perfectly good for forcing again. I have tried such bulbs myself and had good results. Where the spikes have been cut down close to the ground, the bulbs, even if of good size, do poorly, but as the bulk of yours did not flower at all they should prove quite satisfactory. C. W.

CHEMICALS IN THE WATER.

In purifying our water, the water company uses four pounds of chloride of lime and ten pounds of alum to 400,000 gallons of water. Would this be harmful to greenhouse plants? If so, would it be equally harmful to outdoor plants and vegetables? L. C. B.—Kan.

I would not consider that the chemicals used would be likely to have an injurious effect upon greenhouse plants, especially as a large proportion of the chemicals would most likely be precipitated before the water would enter the mains. It is possible that in time a sufficient amount might accumulate in the bench soil to interfere with the growth of the plants, and it would then be necessary to remove the surface soil, but I do not think it likely that such a course would be necessary.

There would be less danger in the open ground, where the rains would wash anything that is soluble into the subsoil. T.

Brooklyn, N. Y. E. R. Storey has been appointed sales manager of the Metropolitan Material Co., this to take effect March 1, 1917, on which date the company will remove to its new 10 acre plant at Flushing and Woodward avenues, Brooklyn. A special announcement to the trade from the Metropolitan Material Co. will be made later.

Jackson, Mich. A fire which started from an oil stove did considerable damage to the A. W. Furnival & Son establishment February 6. The greenhouse to which the fire was confined was badly gutted and much of the stock in this house was a total loss. The store interior was damaged by the smoke, but not enough to interfere with business, says A. W. Furnival. Insurance was carried on the buildings.

SEASONABLE NOTES.

Raising Cattleya Seedlings.

February and March are suitable months in which to make sowings of seeds of cattleyas and other orchids. Only a few specialists are as yet doing this work and they are in the main devoting their energies to raising hybrids. We have a bewildering multiplicity of these already and the end is not nearly in sight. What we need, however, is that one or two growers break away from the work of cross breeding and raise seedlings in quantities of the standard cattleyas, especially C. labiata, which becomes scarcer and smaller each year.

To raise orchid seedlings successfully, a warm, moist house is needed. A glass case or cases must be provided, in which pots containing fern fiber on which to sow the seeds are to be placed. Do not use any moss; it makes too much growth and smothers the seedlings. Coarse bath toweling or burlap stretched across the inside of the cases I have found good for seedling raising; also, pots filled with fern fiber and the tops covered with burlap, tucked in well to make a firm, smooth and well rounded surface. The burlap should be moistened with a fine sprayer before the seed is sown.

Germinating the Seeds.

A close atmosphere and fine sprayings are necessary. Sprayings may be needed once or twice a day, according to the weather. Admit air sparingly at first, but do not keep the atmosphere too close, as that would promote a slimy growth on the seeded surfaces. Shade from all sunshine. As the tiny seedlings appear, a little air can be left on all night. To prevent damage from snails and other pests, all pots should be elevated on other pots, which stand in trays of water. The raising of orchid seedlings is fussy but interesting work and will some day become a considerable industry in America. Let us, however, have more seedlings of good commercial varieties of proven value and less of the bigeneric hybrids whose names and numbers are becoming bewildering.

Cattleya Schroederæ now has its sheaths well made up and while it proves less popular on the markets than C. labiata and C. Trianæ, it fills in a gap nicely until C. Mossiæ and C. Mendellii come in season. Give all these spring and early summer cattleyas a light position, so that the growths will be well ripened. You can shade heavily in winter and get plants of a rich, dark green color, but they will invariably flower disappointingly. If you are buying any freshly imported cattleyas, place your orders early. Supplies this season are more or less uncertain and, the demand being strong, all will not secure the plants they need.

A VALUABLE TRIANÆ PLANT.

Just figure it for yourself. Seventy-nine blooms, all on one Cattleya Trianæ plant! Seventy-nine blooms, each worth— Hold on there! We are going too fast. If you intend to figure it for yourself, you must place your own valuation on the blooms. What would they probably be worth in your market? In the florists' business there are many uncertainties—enough of them, one would think, to make a gambler feel at home in the trade—and among these uncertainties the prices must be included. Still, at any reasonable, average appraisement, a Trianæ plant with seventy-nine blooms would not be wasting space in the greenhouse. It would not be merely cumbering the ground, like the fruitless fig tree in sacred writ.

The 79-flowered Trianæ was grown at the Dale Estate, at Brampton, Ont., and W. G. Peacock, of that establishment, supplied the photograph from which the illustration was made. Of course so small a snapshot could not do full justice to the original, though the plant was tilted toward the camera at an angle that brought as many of the blooms as possible into view. Mr. Peacock is authority for the number of blooms. He remarks that the plant was a magnificent specimen, though only 4 years old. The grower of it says that in his thirty years of experience he has never seen a better sample of Cattleya Trianæ.

The grower does not say anything about his cultural methods; that might be a long story. At any rate, though two cooks use the same recipe and the same materials, one may concoct a dish so delicious as to deserve the name of angels' food, while the other may hand out a conglomeration so unpalatable or indigestible as to "drive a man to drink." And there is as much difference in growers as in cooks.

Portland Site of Test Garden.

This organization was promised the coöperation of the city government of Portland through its park department, and now is an established organization, ready for work. This movement for a rose test garden at Portland has been encouraged from the start by the American Rose Society.

The executive committee at this meeting, upon resolution, decided unanimously to designate Portland, Ore., as the place for the official rose test garden of the Pacific northwest, and to coöperate with the local organization. It appointed Messrs. Currey, Clark and Tucker, who, as a committee, together with the Portland association and the city government of Portland, will formulate plans for the location and government of the garden, and provide rules and regulations for all tests and contests.

Adolph Farenwald, manager of the show, is actively looking after all the details and reported matters moving along nicely. Representatives from the leading firms in Philadelphia were present at the meeting.

The membership dues for 1917 were reported by the secretary to be coming in finely. There are about 400 associate members now on record, and a ticket of admission to the coming show is forwarded to each member as his dues are paid.

Robert Pyle presented an invitation from Newport, R. I., in which the society was invited to hold an exhibition of outdoor roses at that resort July 4. It was considered best to defer action on this matter until certain details pertaining to such an exhibition could be obtained. Benj. Hammond, Sec'y.

SWEET PEAS OUTDOORS.

To follow the late indoor sowings of sweet peas, it is time now to start some seeds to plant outdoors as soon as we get something approaching settled weather. The land on which sweet peas are to be planted ought to be prepared in the fall. If this has not been done, take advantage of the first possible open spell of weather, when the frost has left the ground, to prepare suitable trenches. If you want only one or two varieties for your home trade, plant, for white, Nora Unwin or Constance Hinton; for clear pink, Hercules or Countess Spencer; for lavender, Florence Nightingale or Asta Ohn; for orange pink, Improved Helen Lewis. If you want greater variety, the following are thoroughly dependable: Primrose, Dobbie's Cream; orange scarlet, Thomas Stevenson; bicolor, Blanche Ferry Spencer; blush, Elfrida Pearson; scarlet, Fiery Cross; cream pink, Margaret Atlee; blue, Captain of the Blues; rose, Edith Taylor; crimson, Maud Holmes; maroon, King Manoel; picotee-edged, Martha Washington; cerise, Illuminator.

Sow the seeds in pans or shallow flats of pure sand. It will pay to soak or chip the seeds of the white varieties before sowing. Pot them off into 3-inch pots before the roots of the seedlings become too lengthy. Shade the plants from the bright sun for a day or two, gradually harden them off and then plant them outdoors, from the middle to the end of April, according to latitude. Allow twelve inches between the plants. The rows may seem scanty at the outset, but if you have prepared the ground well the supports will soon become densely covered with haulm. Flowers by this method will be produced at least a fortnight ahead of those from the earliest sowing made outdoors, and there simply will be no comparison in the quality of the flowers.

WEILAND'S SWEET PEAS.

I am sending under separate cover a sweet pea with seven flowers on one stem, which you know is something out of the ordinary. This is a sport of Rose Queen and is the third flower it has thrown with more than four flowers to one stem. We found one with five flowers, one with six and then this one, with seven. At the rate this flower is increasing in the number to one stem, we shall some day be picking peas with a whole bunch to one stem.

I am also sending you a sample of six other sports of Rose Queen. I have five houses of sweet peas, 28x300 feet. I have at least twenty leading varieties and consider Rose Queen the queen of them all. I think a great deal of the sports of this variety, of which I am sending samples. The white one throws a longer stem than any other white I have ever grown, while the flower is the same as Rose Queen, only pure white. The blue is a solid blue, not two shades of blue, nor too dark, a blue that I believe will take. Then there are two shades of lavender, one with a shorter stem than Rose Queen, but with a flower of the same size and form. I consider it the best lavender I have ever had. It is a real lavender, not like some of the varieties of today, neither lavender nor pink. In this class Rose Queen has a sport which you will see has a large flower and long stem, with the color the same as Heather Bell. There is one sport with the color of lilac. This one has a long stem, but the flower is much smaller than Rose Queen itself. The color is fine and no doubt this will be a winner. Then there are at least three shades of pink, running from Rose Queen on to almost light red. These I consider of great value to the trade, as they are much brighter in color than any other varieties of today. I was of the opinion that these sports had originated since I had bought the seed, but while showing them last week at the carnation meeting at Indianapolis, Mr. Pettit told me they were in the seed when he sold it to me. I bought one pound of this seed, which I consider the best investment I ever made.

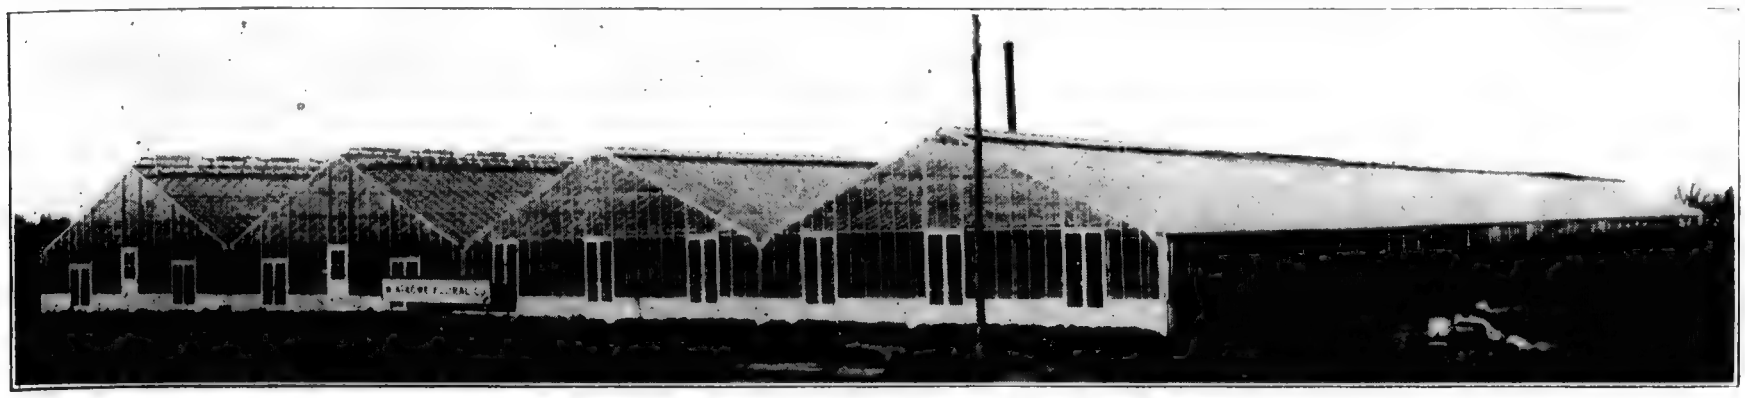
I am now trying to work up a stock of each sport separately, which will take several years. Peter Weiland.

ROWE'S RISE.

While W. A. Rowe, of Kirkwood, Mo., is rated as one of the younger florists of the central states, he should be marked as a possible "comer" in the "big fellows'" class of the future. Starting the growing business in 1907, Mr. Rowe in the course of prosperous times erected eight houses, each 25x100; but the boom of the last year has called for still further expansion, so the Rowe Floral Co. purchased ground outside the city and had erected thereon four houses, each 36x300 feet, from materials furnished by the American Greenhouse Mfg. Co. and the Moninger Co., of Chicago. Although a general line of stock is produced by the company, carnations and chrysanthemums are the main crops, the illustrations on page 19 showing the interior of one of the houses planted to white carnations.

THE CLUBS ARE BUSY

AT CHICAGO.



Publicity Night.

The meeting of the Chicago Florists' Club February 8 had been announced as Publicity Night, with Ella Grant Wilson, of Cleveland, and J. H. Burdett, of Chicago, to address the members on the subjects of publicity and advertising. That the trade in Chicago is interested in these topics was manifest by the large number who were present. It was, looked at from almost any angle, a thoroughly successful meeting, a spirit of zest being in evidence which made one feel that the organization is on the threshold of a busy year.

Miscellaneous Business.

In the absence of President W. H. Amling, who had not recovered sufficiently from his illness to attend, Vice-president Paul Klingsporn acted as chairman. Duncan Robertson was elected to membership and applications were received from the following: N. Wright, John Sinner, Chas. Niemann, G. F. Kastelnik, Arthur M. Luedtke and T. E. Waters.

Fred Lautenschlager, chairman of the posterette committee for St. Valentine's day, announced that 362,000 stamps and 82,000 posterettes had been sold up to that date. The sale showed a profit to the club, which will be used for future work in publicity. Because of the excellent results obtained from this experiment, it was decided that a committee be designated to do publicity work of a similar nature for Easter. The same men were appointed.

August Poehlmann stated that all the bills for the Grand Floral Festival had been paid and that there remained in the treasury a balance of $80.

"Sentiment and Flowers."

Ella Grant Wilson spoke on "Sentiment as Applied to Publicity for Flowers" as employed in her work in Cleveland. She reminded those present that the florists' business is the only business in the world which rests wholly on sentiment; that florists have used love, the greatest force in the world, and commercialized it. This fact was appreciated by the Cleveland Florists' Club and it decided to combine this sentiment with the publicity. The club decided to raise a fund for community advertising which would be absolutely impersonal. This was done and she was appointed to write articles on flowers for the Cleveland papers. Mrs. Wilson illustrated her talk with many clippings from Cleveland papers which had previously been arranged about the room and which showed the manner in which she went about her work. This material, she said, was furnished to the papers with no charge to them.

Increasing Buyers.

James H. Burdett, who has been press agent for nearly all the flower shows at the Coliseum, next spoke on "The Opportunity of Increasing the Number of Flower Buyers by Publicity." Mr. Burdett pointed out that this is an age of publicity. "Fifteen years ago," he said, "nobody knew automobiles or phonographs, but florists were already prosperous. Those industries grew up by the employment of publicity, and today what does the average family spend more on, phonograph records or flowers? There is only a certain amount of money to be spent for other than the necessities of life, and luxuries are first to suffer in times of stringency. Automobiles have outstripped carriages, phonographs, pianos. It would be strange if artificial flowers should outstrip the natural product, but the only certain way to oppose this is by publicity. Publicity serves two ends: It gets new business and helps retain the present; it therefore must be looked upon as a kind of investment, for once teach a man to buy flowers and he will continue to do so for the rest of his life."

Royce Eckstone, a Chicago advertising man, spoke on advertising, that is, the use of paid space. He pointed out that all national organizations advertise to protect their industries. He said that advertisements must be run in the papers if general publicity is to be successful and that such copy should be written to prove flowers are a necessity, not a luxury, and also that it should be aimed at artificial flowers.

Other Speakers.

Mr. Malvin, of Cleveland, added a few words to what had already been said of the good the publicity in Cleveland papers had done florists of that city.

Vice-president Klingsporn, in speaking of the express service, said that in New York and Philadelphia the florists had reminded the express companies that florists ship all the year around and that because of this they are entitled to more consideration than those who ship only at Christmas. The express companies replied by providing special space on all platforms for cut flowers and giving same preference over other merchandise. Mr. Klingsporn said he thinks that if the proposition were put to the express officials here, they would be willing to do likewise.

Poehlmann Bros. Co. exhibited a collection of cattleyas and phalænopsis, for which the thanks of the club were extended.

Reports of the flower show committee, by Messrs. Weathered, Young and Herrington, were optimistic. Mr. Young said almost all the exhibition space has been engaged, also in the program, with an advance sale of trade tickets amounting to over $2,000.

J. H. Dick have an account of the Indianapolis carnation convention and David Ward also spoke interestingly of it. Mr. De Forest, chairman of the banquet committee, reported progress. There should be an attendance of at least 400. March 17 is the date.

W. H. Siebrecht, Jr., referred to the threatened quarantine legislation and said there is no reason for uneasiness, as the American Forestry Association is redrafting its bill and will do nothing further until conference is had with the New York Florists' Club and the nurserymen's association.

The following were elected to membership: Peter Henderson, of Jersey City; J. E. Weir, Jr., Jamesport, L. I.; Walter Hunter, Englewood, N. J.; Curt Thimm, Roslyn, N. Y.; D. B. Thom, Brooklyn; James Stuart, Mamaroneck, N. Y.; Geno Masson, A. Warendorff, Charles Voit, Thomas Tobin, W. T. Homburg, Karl Landolt, Ernest Stumpp, Henry Hoffman, Hamilton Henry, W. C. Fogarty, Charles B. Hanft, L. B. Wertheimer and Otto Korb, New York. Several made pledges of loyalty. The following were proposed: Charles Gille, C. M. Thel, S. Kakuda, J. J. Fellouris, C. Sackalos, J. M. Miller, F. R. Martin, Willard Kervan, L. C. L. Smith, Wm. Kaler, E. K. Bowne, John T. Gilbas and A. Macmillan. The large accession to the membership is largely due to the activity of President Stumpp, and, on motion of A. J. Guttman, a rising vote of thanks was given him for his good work.

Secretary Young's report showed a balance January 1 of $14,925.

Resolutions on the deaths of Samuel Batchelor and S. J. Reuter were ordered and committees appointed.

A special invitation from Philadelphia to attend the exhibition of the American Rose Society was read and accepted.

A Mr. Roth gave an interesting address on "The High Cost of Forgetting," and illustrated it by remarkable feats of memory. The club gave him an enthusiastic vote of thanks.

Exhibits and Awards.

The judges reported the following awards to exhibitors:

S. J. Goddard, South Framingham, Mass., vase of Carnation Laddie, 88 points; Carnation Doris, 85 points; Carnation Rosalia, 85 points.

Ira J. Marvin, Wilkes-Barre, Pa., Carnation Cornell, vote of thanks.

FUNGUS IN BENCHES.

Regarding the inquiry of Wachendorf Bros., of Atlanta, Ga., in The Review of February 8, as to the cause of a fungus which destroys their plants in greenhouse benches, gas leakage in the soil will cause the condition of which they speak. The soil becomes hard and has the appearance of being frozen and full of white frost or mold, and of course it results in the loss of the plants. These parties may find their trouble to be due to this cause, or again it may be due to some other.

THE FREEZE IN FLORIDA.

After my years of experience with the winters of Toledo, O., where I was in the greenhouse business, the worst of weather here at De Land, Fla., seems soft and salubrious, but by the time you get this letter you will undoubtedly have many reports about the big freeze in this state last week. Here, in and about De Land, oranges and other citrus fruits are the main crop and prospects look somewhat blue for the growers. The reports vary a great deal, but the damage certainly was heavy.

About half of this season's crop has been harvested and shipped; of the other half, which is still on the trees, the greater part will be a dead loss. I cut some fruit open after the first night's frost and found ice in it. Yet some growers tell me they brought grapefruit from their groves and found it to be unharmed. Growers who had coke or oil pots close enough saved some of their fruit.

Trees in this district were mostly well ripened and were still dormant, and these will, I believe, come out without any serious damage. But farther south, where the average temperature is not as cool as it is here, the trees must have suffered severely. I hear that at Orlando, about forty miles south of here, many trees are split open. Any greenhouse man can imagine what that means. The temperature here was reported as low as 14 degrees above zero. The lettuce and celery crops around Sanford, twenty miles south of here, have suffered badly.

The tourists, who are the main "crop" here, seem to take matters quite philosophically. Even if it freezes occasionally during a spell like this, the sun comes out every day and makes everybody feel that Florida is a good place to be in, anyway.

To a florist it is interesting to see what effect the freeze had on the various plants and trees grown here. On honeysuckles, which were in full bloom, all blossoms were killed. Among potted aspidistras, standing side by side, one would be frozen to the pot and the next one unhurt. Sansevierias acted the same way. Bougainvillea glabra, where covered a little, even had some blossoms left. Cycas revoluta and different sorts of phœnix, as well as the local cabbage palm, seem to be all sound. The foliage on the magnolias and oaks is as green as ever. Oleanders, which were not yet in blossom, are not affected, but poinsettias and hibiscus are pretty well cut down. Cannas and nasturtiums that had been well covered came out fairly well. The immense tubs of Boston ferns that one could see here everywhere are dead down to the soil, but will come out all right.

The most frozen thing down here is the local colored man, but even he, I noticed this morning, is humming and crooning again, while swinging pick or shovel on the paving jobs.

Wm. B. Currey, the local florist, lost a few geraniums and Paris daisies, but adiantums, pteris, kentias and arecas on the same bench came out unhurt. His Asparagus plumosus, of which he ships heavily to the north, suffered a little, but only the softest, youngest growth was nipped, while matured sprays were untouched. This plumosus is grown under lath roofs, surrounded by board walls that are not at all tight. Mr. Currey did not try to heat his asparagus plantation, but it came through the cold wave nicely. He will be able to ship regularly.

TILE IN GREENHOUSE BENCHES.

In The Review of February 1 I noticed an inquiry about tile benches, by W. R. W. As we have had considerable experience in different kinds of benches, I thought I would offer some suggestions that might be of value to the inquirer. Eleven years ago we tore down an old greenhouse and rebuilt it from the benches up. We found that the bench legs were the first part to decay, so in rebuilding we bought common 4-inch drain tile cut twenty-four inches long. We set the tile two feet apart in the row, with three rows for a 5-foot bench. The tile cost us 3 cents each, which is less than the cheapest 2x4 leg you could buy, to say nothing about the braces required to hold the wooden legs up and a block or something for them to stand on. We put a shovelful of concrete down before setting the tile and when this becomes hard it makes a big foot which will not settle or tip over. We used some of our old 2x4 lumber for crosspieces and for bottoms a lot of best grade cypress that had only been in one year. That same grade of cypress would cost about $50 per thousand feet now. Last summer we bought a carload of flat bench tile and stringers, as we had the tile legs, which were as good as new. We ran our stringers crosswise and had the tile cut in 24-inch lengths for the bottoms. We used the tile nine inches wide and six of them made about fifty-six inches in width. On each side we ran a piece of 2x4 lumber and on that we put a 6-inch sideboard of best cypress, which we treated to two coats of wood preserver. These sides were tied together with wire cables under the bench. This makes us a bench about five feet four inches wide. If we were to build new from the legs up we would run the stringers lengthwise and use 28-inch or 30-inch slabs. If I could not get the drain tile I would buy the legs made of the same material as the stringers and bottoms. I would not under any consideration use wooden legs, as the tile is cheaper, quicker set and more durable.

DUTCH BULBS

BULB GROWING IN HOLLAND.

[This is the third and last installment of a paper read at a recent meeting of the Cleveland Florists' Club, in Cleveland, O., by John Van Leeuwen, of Sassenheim, Holland. The preceding two sections of his paper were published in The Review of January 25 and February 1.]

We now come to a genus of extremely popular bulbous plants, namely, narcissi.

In Greek mythology Narcissus was the son of the river god Cephissus and the nymph Liriope, and was distinguished for his beauty. The seer Tiresias told his mother that he would have a long life, provided he never looked upon his own features. The rejection of the love of the nymph Echo drew upon him the vengeance of the gods, who made him see his own image. He fell in love with his own reflection in the water of a spring and pined away, or killed himself, and the flower that now bears his name sprang up in the spot where he died. That is one version.

Narcotic and Poisonous Properties.

Another opinion is that the name is derived from the word "narce," on account of the flowers' narcotic perfume. In mythology the plants were consecrated to the Furies, who are said by the older writers to have employed the narcissus to first stupefy those whom they wished to punish. Writers of comparatively modern date claim that the odor of the flowers causes madness, just as the flowers of the common scarlet field poppy are now said by country people to induce faintness or headache. In support of this theory many instances are on record in our own day where the odor of Narcissus Tazetta, for example, in close rooms, has proved extremely disagreeable if not actually injurious to delicate persons. All the parts of the plant are narcotic and highly poisonous, a fact which has been proved by many florists who have to cut a large quantity of the flowers every day.

Narcissi are natives of central Europe and the Mediterranean regions, while one species, Narcissus Tazetta, extends through Asia and Japan. From some of these, by cultivation and hybridization, have sprung the numerous modern varieties which are now so popular.

Five Botanical Groups.

Botanically narcissi are divided into five groups:

Hoop Petticoat, or Corbularia. These have unusually large trumpets compared with the small petals. They are only small flowers, anyway.

Pseudo-narcissi, which correspond to the group Ajax, and which are the so-called daffodils. To this group belong the bicolor varieties and the large trumpets, such as Emperor and Golden Spur.

Mock narcissi, or star daffodils, to which belong N. incomparabilis, of which Sir Watkin is a variety.

Polyanthus narcissi, to which belong the Chinese sacred lilies and Paper White grandiflora.

Poet's narcissi, or Pheasant's Eye narcissi, to which belongs Poeticus ornatus.

Narcissi have been grown in western Europe since 1500, and it is highly probable that the most common species were introduced long before that time. Lobel speaks of the culture of narcissi as far back as 1570 and Gerard describes several kinds which were popular at the time of Queen Elizabeth.

Soil and Culture.

The soil in which we grow narcissi is the poorest we have. While for hyacinths and tulips the soil must contain a certain percentage of chalk, a large percentage of this mixed with the soil would be injurious to narcissi. They require but little manure; in fact, many of them are grown without any. They are planted often in ground which has not been loosened and they do not seem to be any the worse for it.

The cultivation is extremely easy and requires but little care. The only point about which we must be careful is that a certain disease, which we call "fire," does not spread. This is a fungous disease which produces small gray spots on the foliage, and, if the leaves on which it appears are not immediately removed, it spreads so quickly, under certain conditions of the weather, that a healthy plant, perfectly green and growing fast, will be as dead as a doornail inside of three days.

A Destructive Pest.

Last year, however, a small but formidable pest, which we never had seen before, played havoc with acre upon acre of daffodils. This pest was imported with a lot of bulbs which came from Guernsey as planting size. It is a

SEASONABLE SUGGESTIONS

Dutch Bulbs.

It will not be necessary after this date to place bulbous stock in the dark or below the benches to give it the necessary length of stem, but if bench room is scarce a row of flats or pans can be stood below the benches near the walks. It is better, however, to place the bulbs in pans or pots direct on the benches to keep them stocky. A common question now is how soon to start to force tulips, daffodils and hyacinths for Easter. Not yet awhile. About three weeks in an ordinary greenhouse temperature should suffice for any of these bulbs, provided they are well rooted and started when housed. Much depends on the weather. Plants will grow more during one clear, sunny day than in two dark ones, but speaking generally if bulbs are housed about March 10 to 15 they should be in ample time.

Roses for Easter.

If the ramblers and polyanthas or Baby ramblers have buds nicely showing, they will be in nice season for Easter in an average night temperature of 58 to 60 degrees. If the pots are well filled with roots, as they should be now, give them occasional soakings of cow manure water, but discontinue its use as soon as the flowers start to open, as its use then tends to take color from the flowers. Spray them on clear days only and be sure the foliage is dry before nightfall. Avoid cold drafts, which bring mildew and all its attendant evils. On the first appearance of it use sulphur on the pipes and plants; in fact, it is a safe plan to keep a little sulphur on the pipes right along. It is well to send the plants along so that they will be in flower sufficiently early to gradually inure them to a cooler temperature before shipping or offering for sale.

Easter Lilies.

At this season Easter lily queries arrive almost every day. It is generally conceded that if the buds can be seen when Lent comes in, the plants will be all right if given an average night temperature of 60 degrees. As Lent arrives February 21, backward plants should be given more heat and frequent syringings to forward them. Plants which are too dwarf can be lengthened by placing them in a batch together and shading them rather heavily. Do the necessary hard forcing now, rather than nearer Easter, and you will have flowers of much greater substance.

Deciduous Shrubs for Easter.

Such deciduous shrubs as lilacs, wistarias, malus, prunus, cratægus, corchorus and forsythias should now be placed in an ordinary greenhouse temperature, in which they will break far more strongly and bloom better than when placed in a tropical temperature, as too often is advised. For store and shipping it is a decided advantage not to have these shrubs too much opened; particularly is this true of the malus, prunus, wistarias and corchorus. Keep these shrubs well sprayed until they break, after which spray more moderately.

RATS RUIN CARNATIONS.

For several days I have noticed that buds on our carnation plants have been nipped and partly eaten by rodents during the night. Chickweeds also are touched, but nothing else seems to be disturbed and I have found no tracks in the beds. I have noticed a few rats around the place. Do you think they are to blame? A. E. P.

The rats you see in your greenhouses no doubt chew your carnation blooms. Rats are fond of the young seeds of the blooms they chew off. A. F. J. B.

AVERAGE CUT OF CARNATIONS.

I have a small greenhouse planted with White Enchantress and Herald carnations. This is my first experience in carnation growing; so I should like to ask some questions on the subject. How many blooms should one plant produce, under ordinary conditions? How long should they keep on blooming? I planted mine about the middle of October. I was advised to put three inches of manure in the bottom of the bench and fill the rest of the space, three inches, with sod soil. Was that right? In three months I have cut about two blooms per plant. The Enchantress plants look perfectly healthy, but the Herald plants do not look quite so well. The blooms are not so large on either variety as they were at first.

What is the best way to get rid of red spider? I have a hot water boiler and keep a temperature of about 50 degrees at night and 60 to 80 degrees during the day. The stems are rather weak. Shall I apply lime, and in what form? W. P.—Neb.

A fair, average cut from carnations planted in July or early August would be about fifteen blooms to the plant. Since your plants were not benched until October, you could hardly expect so many. Ten blooms per plant would perhaps be a fair average in your case. These late planted plants could not be expected to give as steady a cut of blooms as the earlier benched plants would.

You put too much manure in the bottom of the bench; one inch would have been ample. If the rest of the manure had been thoroughly mixed with the soil, the plants would be the better for it. The stems should begin to become stronger, now that the sun is gaining in strength, but a sprinkling of ground limestone or air-slaked lime, watered in, will help. To rid your plants of red spider, get one of the Evans salt sprayers and use it according to directions. There is nothing like it for preventing red spider. A. F. J. B.

PLANTS HAVE LOST VITALITY.

Can you tell us what is the matter with our bench of carnations? We prepared the soil carefully, using three parts of good loam and one part of well rotted cow manure. The plants, when we bought them, seemed to be good, strong stock, full of promise, and for a time they did well, producing plenty of good, strong-stemmed blooms. Then they began to retrograde. The carnation rust troubled them slightly, but we controlled it by spraying, as advised in The Review. Yet the plants continued to lose strength. The blooms became smaller, the stems were weak and there were many splits. Now some of the plants are even getting so they bear single blooms, like a garden pink.

We have fed them with bone meal, with additional manure, and even with plant food, but all to no avail; they have no vitality. One florist told us that we had been given old plants, which had been benched before and were practically done blooming anyway, but we do not think that is correct. We believe that the fault must be with us, as this is our first year with the greenhouse. Our sweet peas are excellent and our bench of snapdragons is a beautiful sight, but our carnations are a failure. I should have added that the temperature at night has run from 46 to 50 degrees and in the daytime from 55 to 65 degrees. F. H. M.—Mich.

Your letter does not give any clue as to what might be wrong with your carnations. If I could see a plant, I might be able to tell something about it. The fact that you got a good cut of salable blooms in the fall would indicate that the plants were good and that there was nothing seriously wrong with the soil. I hardly think that any firm that makes a business of supplying field-grown carnation plants would send you old plants—that is, 2 years old. A. F. J. B.

Arcadia, Fla.—A. W. Zimmerman, manager of the Arcadia Seed House, is building a greenhouse covering 1,200 square feet, the first in this city.

Apopka, Fla.—Newell & Ustler state that they will be unable to ship plants for some time, as the ferns were frosted in the big freeze of February 3, even if protected by slat houses.

Tampa, Fla.—The Knull Floral Co., which had begun to do considerable business in the way of supplying young stock to the trade, reports that the freeze of February 3 destroyed all unprotected plants.

Florence, S. C.—The ventilating apparatus wore the insulation off an electric wire in the establishment of De Witt House and sent 110 volts into the bench. When Mr. House put his hand on the soil he received the surprise of his life. As no harm was done the stock, he suggests the use of an electric current as an insect exterminator.

West Palm Beach, Fla.—E. G. Gillett, the Cincinnati wholesale florist, accompanied by Mrs. Gillett, is here to spend the month as guest of C. J. Ohmer, asparagus grower. "This country is a revelation to me," he said to The Review February 10. "The freeze a week ago did thousands of dollars of damage, all soft stock being ruined, but today it is 70 degrees again and summer."

Pass Christian, Miss.—"Our old friend, Horace Cheeseman, came breezing in on the coldest day of the year, freezing up all the vegetation," says J. B. Adams, "but we had a fine crop under cover and surprised him with fresh lettuce salad for dinner. But that night Mr. Cheeseman's roost, the Mexican Gulf hotel, burned down. However, he carried a good bulb order when he went away."

Orlando, Fla.—This is the report of F. W. Fletcher, well known in the trade as formerly located at Auburndale, Mass., now proprietor of the Rosalind Gardens here: "Florida has experienced another heavy freeze. February 2 a howling northwester, straight from the icebergs of Alaska, swept the state. The minimum at Orlando February 3 was 22 degrees. That night was clear, with temperatures ranging from 32 degrees at 6 p. m. to 17 degrees at 6:30 the next morning. These temperatures, with slight variations, seem to have prevailed over the entire state. The damage can hardly be estimated at present writing. Citrus fruits on the trees, estimated at about $5,000,000, are frozen. Young citrus trees and nursery stock mostly are destroyed. Bearing orange and grapefruit trees are damaged, but to what extent cannot be determined for some time. All vegetable crops, except cabbage, are a total loss."

OBITUARY

James King.

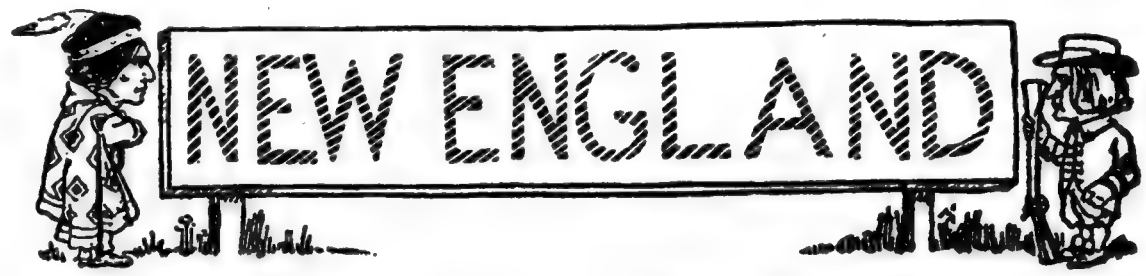
James King, nurseryman at Elmhurst, Ill., and well known in the florists' trade in Chicago, died at his home February 9. He was 72 years of age and a member of the pioneer King family of Connecticut. He was born in New Haven and removed to the Chicago district twenty-six years ago, engaging in the nursery and landscape business at Elmhurst, later acquiring property at Wheaton, Ill., also used for nursery purposes. In recent years he became something of a peony specialist and in addition to a wholesale business in the roots he shipped large quantities of cut blooms to the Chicago market.

Mr. King is survived by Mrs. King and a son, George, who will continue the business.

F. G. Lehmann.

F. G. Lehmann, for fifty years a florist of Anamosa, Ia., died last week, at the age of 82. He was born in Germany and emigrated to this country on reaching his majority. Years later he started a florists' business at Anamosa and was successful from the start. In 1915 he turned the business over to his son-in-law, E. L. Harvey, who conducts it today.

Mr. Lehmann's ambition to paint was thwarted because of partial blindness, but after 60 years of age this hope was realized, when, under the tutelage of a daughter who studied art, he produced several pictures of real merit. When his residence and paintings were burned a few years ago, Mr. Lehmann received insurance on his pictures amounting to more than that of the house and household goods combined.



Adam Fehr.

After several months' illness, Adam Fehr, a resident of Belleville, Ill., for more than half a century, died on the first of the month in a Belleville hospital. Mr. Fehr was born in Germany, November 30, 1828, and emigrated to the United States in 1850. Subsequently he opened a store at Belleville, which now is conducted by his son, Adolf Fehr. The decedent is survived by three sons and two daughters.

Calvin H. Cox.

Calvin H. Cox, aged 45 years, a widely known florist of Springfield, O., passed away suddenly last month, death resulting after a short illness from acute diabetes. Mr. Cox was born at Donnelsville, O., and twenty years ago moved to Springfield. Although by training a bookkeeper, Mr. Cox soon after his arrival at Springfield abandoned office work for greenhouse work. Besides his wife, two children survive.

Washington, Pa.—Feeling the need of an organization through which they could coöperate for the common good of the trade, the florists here February 6 formed the Gardeners' and Florists' Club of Washington, Pa., with the following officers: President, J. O. Minton; vice-president, Charles McGowan; secretary-treasurer, William J. Warrick, Jr. The meetings will be held in the Community building and will be open to all.

Dover, N. H.—C. L. Howe intends to erect a rose house as soon as the weather becomes settled.

New Salem, Mass.—F. D. Cogswell is celebrating his first anniversary in the business as a grower of greenhouse vegetables and pot plants.

Needham, Mass.—With reference to recent inquiries in The Review with regard to sources of supply of Tomato Balch's Fillbasket, David McKenzie, of the Needham Conservatories, says he is growing the variety, using seed obtained from Henry F. Michell Co., Philadelphia.

Dover, N. H.—H. E. Meader recently returned from a short business trip to Massachusetts, in which state he called on S. E. Spencer, of Woburn, and L. M. Gage, of Natick. Mr. Meader says that gladiolus bulbs are selling well and believes that there will be a scarcity in the larger sizes before long.

Natick, Mass.—S. Eugene Colburn, whose specialty has been hardy stock, bulbs, pansies, etc., is preparing to build a small greenhouse.

Salem, Mass.—A florists' business has been launched here by Harold W. Kingston, who says he intends to erect a large greenhouse in the spring.

Hebron, Me.—Beginning with hardy perennials and bedding plants, George H. Woodward says he hopes to become a producer of all kinds of stock as the business grows.

Amherst, Mass.—Prof. Frank A. Waugh, head of the Division of Horticulture at the Massachusetts Agricultural College, has been appointed consulting landscape architect to the government forest service. He has been granted a six months' leave of absence from college work to make a tour of inspection of the Imperial valley in California.

MOTT-LY MUSINGS

John Walker, of Youngstown, O., will head a quartette of local celebrities to visit the various plantations on the Isle of Pines, West Indies. A heavy crop of grape fruit is promised on the island, but, as remarked one, "It may prove sour, as was a crop of oranges last year, when a storm swept over our lands and blew down the entire crop."

Fred Burki, of Allegheny, one of the travelers, has gone ahead. "We shall return for the Easter business," observed Mr. Walker, "when we expect to have our usual big stock of potted plants in good shape."

H. W. Cade, of Youngstown, remarked that, while the town was not the gold mine imagined by some, the florists were certainly doing a good volume of general business. The holiday trade called for a higher grade of stock and the prices were willingly paid.

Adgate & Son, of Warren, O., report an exceptional run of funeral work. "All of it helps to swell the grand total," observed Frank Adgate.

The J. H. Cunningham establishment at Delaware, O., is being conducted along the lines laid down by the founder. George W., son and successor, mentioned an unusual demand for stock.

"In our long experience in the business," observed W. H. Underwood, of Underwood Bros., Columbus, O., "I do not recall a more unsatisfactory situation regarding plant sales during the holidays. This stock," referring to a house of Begonia luminosa, "was the most profitable of all. It was raised from seed, easily grown and in fine shape for the holiday trade. Any plants left over are acceptable for window boxes. We wonder why luminosa is not more largely grown. It is a good plant for the house under ordinary conditions. Now look at that fine lot of specimen azaleas in full bloom—no sales at any price. Our experience was a sad one and doubtless similar to that of many others. A part of the azalea shipment went astray, although we had them sent by express from New York. The missing case turned up late, with the plants badly damaged. Now we have to wrestle with the express company for settlement. I tell you, in future we intend to grow more flowering stock, even if we have to sacrifice space, such as chrysanthemums, for instance; or else secure the plants from the grower earlier and finish them ourselves. Azaleas when carried over are rarely so good the second year, in our experience. Of course, there are exceptions," concluded Mr. Underwood.

J. R. Hellenthal, of Columbus, looks for a banner spring trade. "One thing is certain, we will not need to be told more than once to take away the empty pots from the backyard when bedding-out time comes; in fact, we are figuring out the extra cost now and will tack it on the plants wherever possible," observed Mr. Hellenthal.

The Bell Floral Co., of Franklin, Pa., experienced a merry jingle through the holiday season. Now a gentle tinkling is heard, which will increase in volume as spring opens. Stock is in excellent shape.

H. J. Krueger, of Meadville, Pa., long planned to attend the carnation convention at Indianapolis. He remarked that he had always found it profitable to be present. The business is left in charge of his mother, who has been actively interested in it since it was founded by the late August Krueger.

The Review brings results.

THERE will be no trouble in moving stock this spring; all that will be necessary is that it be good quality and ready in time.

CARNATION cuttings seldom have sold better than is the case this season, especially with those who offer the up-to-date varieties.

COLLECTIONS are reported slow in the trade. Evidently those who sell to the public are not getting their money in as fast as they should.

GREENHOUSES that were empty after the Christmas rush are filling up again. A late Easter always means congestion, with two crops to be matured within a few weeks of each other.

MANY growers who have had indifferent success with roses have turned to carnations because they will bloom with less care. And perhaps therein lies a reason for a loss of popularity and declining prices of carnations.

ASPARAGUS, the bunched plumosus sprays, the supply of which recently has come principally from Florida, but which has been scarce this season, was still further reduced by the severe cold of early February, much of the stock being severely frozen.

IF a grower is not making money this season, in spite of increased expenses, he should take a look around. The probabilities are he will find his trouble in one or more of three places: Either his quality is not up to the requirements of the market, the quantity produced is below the capacity of the place, or the income is dissipated by lack of conservative management.

ONE hears of growers who say they will plant no mums this year, or at least no early or mid-season varieties, but it is a safe wager the total planting of the autumn queen exceeds even last year's record.

LAST week the mails from the west were delayed, some of them for days, and now it is the east that is weather-bound. Of The Review's eastern mail due Monday some of it had not arrived at closing hour Tuesday afternoon.

CHARLES W. JOHNSON, secretary, has sent out a tabular report of the work of the committees to judge seedlings for the Chrysanthemum Society of America, showing that forty-three varieties, counting all types, were passed on last season. The scores were recorded in The Review from week to week as made.

OPEN AT THE BACK.

The editor always has claimed that it was his work, rather than that of the circulation manager, which was responsible for the necessity of printing 12,500 copies of each issue of The Review. But they both got a jolt when this letter came in:

Enclosed please find check for $1.50 for another year's subscription. The Review is the only magazine of all those I take that I almost always open from the back and work forwards so as to see the advertisements first.—John F. Nellist, Grand Rapids, Mich., February 5, 1917.

The advertising manager asserts that when you hear a man complain of the cost of advertising you can be pretty sure he spends a good bit of money elsewhere than in The Review.

A BUSY FORTNIGHT.

Although there was not even one trade exhibition of major importance in the United States last autumn, what was lacking then is to be made up for with good measure next month, when the section of the trade which participates in such enterprises will be confronted with the task resulting from three flower shows of more than local importance overlapping each other within the span of nine days. It means the most active spring show season the trade ever has had.

Perhaps first place should be given to the Rose Festival to be held in Philadelphia, for the reason that it is the undertaking of one of the national organizations, the American Rose Society. It is the first time the Rose Society has undertaken an exhibition independently of any other organization. Plans have been made on a most ambitious scale, the First Regiment armory having been engaged, and the affair without doubt will be the largest exclusive rose show ever held on this continent. The dates are March 20 to 23.

Longest in duration and most pretentious in title is the exhibition to be held at the Grand Central Palace in New York city, from March 15 to 22. This is the joint undertaking of the New York Florists' Club and the Horticultural Society of New York and is called the International Flower Show. Last year's affair was highly successful, but it is the expectation of the management that this year's show in New York will represent a larger cash taking than any previous show in America.

The exhibition season, however, will open simultaneously at New York and St. Louis, the date of the spring show in the Missouri metropolis being March 15 to 18. An armory has been engaged. It is the first attempt at a spring show in that city, calculated to stir up interest there in the 1918 spring exhibition, which will be the National Flower Show of the S. A. F. This year's premium list is comprehensive and the management counts on drawing a considerable measure of support from eastern exhibitors. That there will be a large attendance of those in the trade is assured by the fact that there will be no other spring show in the west.

ASKS PUBLIC TO HELP.

The public is being asked by the Office of Horticultural Investigations of the U. S. Department of Agriculture to contribute to the test gardens at Arlington, Va., roses and peonies of varieties not now represented in the test collections there. At the present time approximately 700 varieties of roses and 400 varieties of peonies are growing in the Arlington gardens. These represent about one-half the varieties of each of these flowers believed to exist in the United States.

The Department of Agriculture is creating the test gardens in coöperation with the American Rose Society and the American Peony Society. The rose garden was begun in 1915. The peony collection was started last fall. The majority of the plants have been contributed by nurserymen and florists, though many have been given by amateurs.

Persons who believe they have varieties of roses or peonies not represented in the Arlington gardens and who wish to contribute to the collections should first write to the Office of Horticultural Investigations, Washington, D. C., offering specific varieties or requesting a list of the varieties desired.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

The extremely cold weather last week shortened the supply in practically all lines. The end of the week found business good, a steady demand keeping the market well cleaned up, with prices holding well and in some cases advancing above the quoted figures.

The present week opened with stock as scarce as ever and the demand the heaviest ever known for St. Valentine's day; indeed, some of the observers remarked that it was more like Christmas than St. Valentine's. Shipping trade was excellent and covered an unusually wide radius. February 12, also a holiday, stock sold so rapidly that local buyers who came a little later in the day experienced some difficulty in finding desirable material for the Lincoln's birthday observances. Perhaps the only exception to the general clean-up was Freesia Purity, which, though of good quality, was found somewhat difficult to move.

American Beauties are still scarce, although some growers are beginning to come in crop and this increase in the supply is making for an easier market. Demand is good and prices are holding up well. Mrs. Russell is in short supply, but the quality on the average is good. Other varieties of roses also are in short supply and are selling well. Shorter lengths clean out first, red, yellow and pink varieties being given the preference over white, but no difficulty is found in moving the longer stock at excellent prices. The supply of carnations has shortened considerably and they sell well at somewhat improved prices. As in the case of roses, red varieties have been in special request this week, being best suited to St. Valentine's purposes.

Easter lilies are scarce and sell well at good prices. The same is true of callas. Violets have suffered considerably from the severe cold, many shipments from the east arriving in a frozen condition. Sweet peas are in good supply and move readily. Calendulas and mignonette are more plentiful but clear readily. Paper Whites are in comparatively light supply and are not difficult to move. Tulips are more abundant and are selling better than the week previous. Jonquils and daffodils also are in heavier supply. The better stock is bringing good prices. A few stevia still arrive. Snapdragons are beginning to come in crop. The quality is considerably improved and a variety of colors is offered. They clear easily.

The freeze in Florida last week has hit the market via the supply of asparagus. For a considerable time Chicago has depended principally on Florida plumosus, with a small quantity of indoor stock and some from California. The supply has not been so large as usual at any time this season and now most of the Florida growers have been put where they will have nothing to ship for at least six weeks.

Ferns are going up, some of the houses having advanced their quotations to $3 per thousand. There are intimations that there will be fireworks in ferns this spring if the freeze in the south has done anything to reduce the early supply from that source.

Mr. Klingel Retires.

Frederick G. Klingel has severed his connection with the firm of Erne & Klingel, having sold his interest to Charles W. Erne. Mr. Klingel will, however, remain at his desk until the weather gets fair and will then take a six months' rest to recuperate his failing health. The business will hereafter be carried on by Charles W. Erne under the firm name of Erne & Co.

Fuel Famine Passing.

The growers who are not forehanded in the matter of fuel have had an extremely trying fortnight, the week ending February 12 having been the worst of the year, with zero temperature and high winds to increase consumption and an embargo up to Lincoln's birthday on all roads bringing coal from the smokeless fields of West Virginia. It is not of record that any greenhouses froze up for want of fuel, but scores of them have been dependent on the day's delivery to get through the night. The necessity has been so great that the high cost has occasioned little comment. With the breaking of the cold wave February 12 and the lifting of the embargo that has prevented shipment of smokeless coal for more than a week, conditions are easing and it is thought that there will be no more danger this season.

sary, so little do the heads of the houses come in contact. At a meeting February 10 it was proposed that a dinner be held at 6:30 p. m., February 16, at which it is hoped to secure the attendance of the manager of every wholesale cut flower house in the city and at which it may be possible to effect a permanent organization. The idea is that a monthly dinner will bring about a better acquaintance, which will go far toward making business pleasant. The committee to arrange the initial dinner consists of O. W. Frese, Phil Schupp, Paul Klingsporn and J. C. Michelsen.

able, it never seriously threatened the rest of the building. Several wholesalers, nevertheless, as a precautionary measure, had their stock ready for quick removal should the necessity arise.

It is reported that the Fleischman Floral Co. has renewed its lease on the double store and basement space it occupies in the Railway Exchange building. This store long has been said to pay the highest rent of any florist west of New York and it is understood that for the recent renewal the price was advanced to $10,000 per year.

Peter Reinberg has started planting his roses for next season. Three houses each of Ophelia, Milady and Champ Weiland, all from 2½-inch pots, have already been planted.

To visitors at the office of the American Bulb Co., Sam Seligman exhibits a passport issued by the State Department for a business trip to Japan. He will sail from Seattle March 1 and expects to be away until sometime in August.

The daily newspapers last week carried an item about a greenhouse employee who mistook nicotine extract for whisky, with the inevitable result. It has not been possible to confirm the facts and it seems doubtful if any florist would make such an error.

James King, who died at Elmhurst February 9, had for many years been a large shipper to the A. L. Randall Co., of pussy willows, peonies, etc. The nursery business will be continued by his son, George King.

The expense of doing business has increased so greatly in the last two years, according to George Wienhoeber, as to necessitate a change of policy in the matter of special sales. No retailer, says Mr. Wienhoeber, can afford a special sale that involves cutting the margin of profit; such sales now can be handled only by obtaining flowers below the usual costs, which has not been possible of late.

Emil Reichling, greenhouse superintendent for Peter Reinberg, was confined to his bed last week with an attack of the grip.

An increase of fifty per cent for the week of February 1 to 9 over the same period last year, is what the records of the Chicago Flower Growers' Association show, according to Paul Klingsporn. Business during January showed an increase of twenty-five per cent over last year, he says.

This is proving an exceptionally good season for Sam Pearce, who has been marketing great quantities of jonquils, daffodils and tulips, obtaining better prices than usual, perhaps because he was ready a little earlier than a majority of the growers of bulbous stock.

J. Marks, of A. Henderson & Co., has returned from an eastern trip.

Joseph Ziska & Sons are nicely settled in their new quarters at 169 to 175 North Wabash avenue. The increased space will permit the expansion of their line in accordance with long cherished plans.

The St. Valentine's day call for bulbous stock exceeded Peter Pearson's rather sanguine expectations. He had all he could do.

A continually increasing business has made it necessary for the A. L. Randall Co. to enlarge its office space by fifty per cent. A. L. Randall and F. M. Johnson have returned from their winter holiday in Cuba.

Valentine business this year was the best it ever has been at Bassett & Washburn's, according to C. L. Washburn.

The "Happiness for Little Tots" department of the A. L. Randall Co. is rapidly being brought to completion under the management of Frank J. Farney. This department will handle a line of specialties for babies.

The Bohannon Floral Co. is preparing to abandon its old stand on Monroe street, the business being transferred to the new permanent store nearby in the Powers building. The new store is one of the most attractive in the downtown section and bids fair to make a fine success.

Visitors.

Ralph M. Ward, New York bulb merchant and plant importer, was in town last week.

D. F. Harrison, greenhouse cucumber grower at Kankakee, Ill., was a visitor February 13, looking up the possibilities of a crop of sweet peas or other cut flowers to take the place of a house of cucumbers 65x450 burned in fumigating with hydrocyanic acid gas.

OMAHA, NEB.

The Market.

The extremely cold weather that has prevailed for the last few weeks has not hurt business so much as one might suspect; in fact, the retailers say they never saw business so good before at this time of the year. Funeral work has been unusually heavy.

The supply of roses is on the increase, except the short grades, which are still scarce. Easter lilies are not plentiful and those who have this stock find a ready sale for it at good prices. Callas are also in light supply. Tulips have made their appearance and, though short of stem, move well.

Various Notes.

The blizzard that struck Omaha and vicinity at the first of the month was hard on the growers. It increased the already high coal bills and caused much extra work. With the wind at a velocity of thirty-five miles per hour and the temperature at 23 below zero, it was a hard proposition for many of the growers to keep from freezing out. Fortunately, only a few suffered slight damage.

Lewis Henderson had his share of funeral work last week, having several designs of unusually large size.

A. Hruban states that he experienced a surprisingly large business last week.

Heavy funeral work kept the force busy early and late.

"Business never was better with downtown retailers," stated S. B. Stewart, of Stewart's Seed Store. "We turned out almost as many orders Saturday, February 10, as we did at any time around the holidays."

A. Hooge, who has conducted a store under the name of The Fernery for the last two years, has disposed of his business to C. E. Baldwin. It is the intention of the new owner to greatly increase the floor space of the store and, besides handling cut flowers and plants, he will carry a full line of bulbs, seeds and nursery stock.

F. H. Swanson suffered some damage to stock during the memorable blizzard. Janousek Bros., of Prospect Hill, and Joseph Zedana also suffered light damage to their stock.

The regular meeting of the Florists' Club was held on the evening of February 8. Only a small number of members attended. Some excellent ideas were suggested, voted on and approved. Among the proposals was a campaign of two months' duration to increase the membership to seventy-five or 100. Membership cards are now in the hands of the printer and will be distributed by Secretary Gardner at an early date. If employers will do their share, employees certainly will do the rest. At the termination of the campaign a banquet will be held at one of the leading hotels.

INDIANAPOLIS.

The Market.

This week has been characterized by exceptionally good business in all lines; counter trade has been brisk, decorations numerous and funeral work heavy. Indications pointed to a big St. Valentine's day for the florists. The florists worked hard for this end by making attractive display windows and inserting unusually clever advertisements in the daily papers.

As yet the rose scarcity has not been relieved. A few more have come into the market, but the increased demand has taken care of these, making the situation the same as before. A few more short grades are appearing and bringing from $3 to $20. Carnations are scarce and the quality is nothing to brag about in most cases, but notwithstanding this they are making from $3 to $4. It is the belief of some dealers that the call for carnations has increased since the show, and that if a larger supply had been on hand it would easily have cleared.

From appearances, it would seem that small flowers, such as freesias, sweet peas and violets, were rare, but this is not so. There has been a large cut, but there also has been a steady demand to utilize it. Practically the only flowers that dragged were the Paper Whites. They have cleaned poorly at $2 per hundred. These have been of good quality and it is hard to account for their lack of popularity. There is not an apparent oversupply of them and funeral work is a big item now. Contrary to last week's conditions, yellow narcissi have surpassed the white ones and make $3 per hundred.

The main call at present is for spring bulbous stock. Jonquils have been first in popularity, with Golden Spur most prominent at $3 and $4 per hundred. Tulips have been good property, with red and yellow in the lead. Potted bulbous stock has also held an important place.

Short-stemmed sweet peas are plentiful, but long-stemmed, fancy stock is just about equal to the demand. Baby primroses hold a significant place in the ranks of small cut flowers and are welcomed at 75 cents to $1 per hundred sprays. Yellow daisies, forget-me-nots and freesias are experiencing an excellent call.

THE original Album of Designs was published in response to many requests from florists who felt the need for an up-to-date book that could be used in taking orders for Funeral Designs, Wedding Decorations and Bouquets, Table Decorations and all cut flower work where it was not practicable to show the customer the finished article as it would be when ready for use. With the publication of this album it became possible to show the finished work in beautifully printed pictures. The first edition sold like hot cakes, a second and third edition went quickly. Now a fourth edition is off the press. Everything is in it—all the standard designs and many new pieces.

Valley has loosened up and an ample supply of orchids is on hand. Prospects for a supply of potted plants for St. Valentine's day were good, azaleas, cyclamens, genistas and a general line of bulbous stock looking most promising. A depression in southern greens has been felt. Smilax has been hard to procure and the supply of fern leaves is limited. As a consequence ingenious florists have been using cut boxwoods for greens. These in many cases have been satisfactory.

Various Notes.

The E. G. Hill Co. had an elaborate St. Valentine window featuring baskets of the smaller and daintier flowers, fancy valentine boxes and mixed hampers of plants decorated with "kewpies."

Frank Sohles is recovering from an attack of the grip.

The Claypool Florist had the decorations for a banquet given in honor of A. J. Beveridge.

Miss D. Rieman, daughter of Otto Rieman, has been extremely ill during the last five weeks and is now in St. Vincent's hospital. Her case is baffling the specialists.

Unusually cold weather and a high wind have caused great losses among local tradesmen by stock freezing in the houses. Shipments of cut flowers and plants are arriving in a frozen condition.

Herman Young and John Heidenreich were appointed a board of appraisers for the Schwomeyer greenhouse property. Christian Schwomeyer, formerly the junior partner, will take over the estate.

Paul Schultz, of Vincennes, Ind., was in the city this week attending the auto show. He is contemplating buying a new machine.

The Bertermann Bros. Co. recently provided decorations for one of the most prominent weddings of the season.

Mrs. Fanny Hurley has been sick for some time.

A handsome new commercial car for John Rieman was displayed at the auto show.

Decorations for a series of wedding parties and receptions have been put up by the Circle Flower Store. This store also has the wedding and a big reception at the Woodstock Club.

Albert Reinken has been extremely ill, bordering on pneumonia.

Albert Rubble has been cutting some of the best fancy sweet peas seen in the market from his new seedling varieties.

The decorations at the auto show were clever and unusual. Boxwoods, bay trees, smilax and cedars were a striking background for fancy blooming plants, which included azaleas, lilacs and bulbous stock. Features of especial interest were little garden spots, which palms, flowers and electric fountains made realistic.

Fred Stoelte now is with the Bertermann Bros. Co.

The next meeting of the Indiana State Florists' Association will be held March 6, at the Dorner establishment at La Fayette, Ind. This meeting will be of special importance, as those in attendance will have the advantage of visiting the experiment station at Purdue University.

Baur & Steinkamp have been busily occupied filling orders for carnation cuttings and young geranium stock.

Lexington, Ky.—"There is a great opportunity in Lexington for a wholesale florists' business," said W. S. Bell, manager for the H. Weber & Sons Co., of Oakland, Md., on a recent visit here. Mr. Bell, who for thirty years was a retail florist of Lexington, said that Chicago growers are now filling wholesale orders for the entire south and southwest. Much of their business, he asserted, could be handled by an aggressive growing establishment at Lexington. Mr. Bell believes that a company investing $100,000 might easily do a business of $200,000.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The extreme cold continues, cutting down the amount of business and the quantity of flowers. Business suffers most, with about the same quantity of flowers as a week ago. The market is easier. This is shown by the fact that buyers who a week ago would take substitutes are now able to have their orders filled more nearly as desired. There is no especial change in prices. The flowers most sought and most scarce have not advanced and the flowers most plentiful have not declined except in a few instances. The shipping demand is the mainstay of the market. Much fine stock went out of town on Lincoln's birthday for St. Valentine's, although the wholesalers thought the extreme cold curtailed the orders, particularly for violets. The local orders for St. Valentine's day commenced in earnest February 13, continuing until the following morning. While all reports are not in, the indications point to active business for that day.

Beauties still are in fair supply at good but not extreme prices. Other roses are enjoying an active week, with an advance on fancy Russell and Hadley and brisk buying in the shorts of staple varieties. Carnations are sold at an average price that is a shade lower than a week ago. Violets are moderate in price, even for St. Valentine's day, owing to the cold. Sweet peas of the Spencer type are popular. Daffodils sell well, but tulips are not good stock. Their quality is fair, but people do not seem crazy about them. Callas are freely used. There are a good many more Easter lilies. Valley is less abundant. Fine gardenias sell better than the ordinary grade. Greens are scarce.

The Rose Festival.

The executive committee of the American Rose Society met in executive session at the Bellevue-Stratford February 8. Those present were Adolph Farenwald, Roslyn, Pa.; Benjamin Hammond, Beacon, N. Y.; Harvey O. May, Summit, N. J.; Samuel S. Pennock, Lansdowne, Pa.; Robert Pyle, West Grove, Pa., and Louis J. Reuter, Westerly, R. I. There was also a largely attended meeting of the whole committee. Routine business was transacted.

The London Flower Shop.

Jack Frost made the window of the London Flower Shop appear inviting, but slightly indistinct. The impression that the place was thoroughly alive was heightened by a number of interesting cards concerning gardenias, floral valentines and a benefit. Inside Mrs. Drew-Bear and Mr. Tabor were cordial in their greetings.

The London Flower Shop is evidently in favor with people of refined taste. There is an air of coziness that appeals at once to the visitor, making the pretty flower and plant combinations appear to advantage. A deep blue vase of calla lilies with their broad foliage, a pale blue bowl with a pink begonia planted in its neatly fitting receptacle, are charming. Add to these bits of color sufficient green in the form of ferns and palms, a dainty desk and a few accessories and you can form a faint idea of at least part of the London Flower Shop. Upstairs is the art gallery, where a great variety of pretty and unique objects of art, mostly flower and plant vases, are tastefully displayed. There are slender Japanese vases, broad Dutch bowls, English Ruskin ware extremely light and beautifully colored, pottery from our own country east and west, novel telephone covers and many other things of interest. Even a cursory view made it clear how much time and thought and knowledge had been spent in gathering that collection. One young woman is kept busy painting flowers and birds and pretty designs on the vases.

Discussing flowers, Mr. Tabor said that floral valentines are growing in popularity. He strongly urged that florists give each other carte blanche in their orders whenever possible. It is to the benefit of all alike to allow the person entrusted with the order to use discretion. The variety of flower or plant designated in a telegram may be scarce or impossible in the market where the order is to be filled, while something else, quite desirable, that would answer just as well may be ready at hand.

Mr. Tabor believes that a retail florist starting in business today should be so situated that nothing need be taken out of the business for two years. In this way a paying business can be built up and credit maintained meanwhile.

The soundness of this principle is evidenced in the high standing of the London Flower Shop.

The Plant Growers' Meeting.

About twenty-five of the leading plant growers of this district met at the establishment of the Robert Craig Co., February 10, to discuss the plant situation. After going thoroughly into every phase of the subject, it was the unanimous opinion of those present that an advance in plant rates next spring is a necessity because of the increase in the cost of production. A committee of five, consisting of Fred Hahman, chairman; Edward Aschmann, David B. Colflesh, Edward Alburger and Walter Davis, was appointed to call a meeting of all the plant growers, to be held in the Florists' Club's room Wednesday, February 21, at 7:30 p. m., to take action in the matter. "United we stand; divided we fall."

Various Notes.

The meeting of the Germantown Horticultural Society scheduled for February 12 was postponed to February 19.

Miss Emily Exley delivered the second of her lectures on garden subjects February 13.

The exhibit of Carnation Cornell, staged by S. S. Pennock-Meehan Co., at the Florists' Club, February 6, was grown by Ira H. Marvin.

A representative of the express companies is expected to appear before the Florists' Club March 5 to discuss the transportation question.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

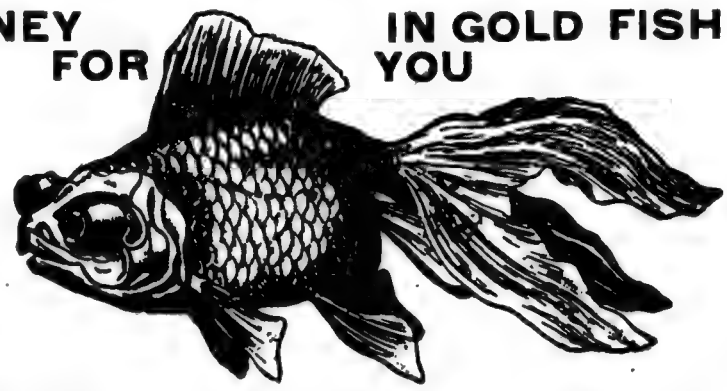
It is winter in earnest, with the temperature hugging zero during the last week, but rose shipments are increasing. At the week's end there was an abundance of everything and Saturday night enough stock of all kinds was left over to begin this week with. But growers have had no occasion to complain as to their returns. The average recently has been nearly double that of a year ago.

The call for short-stemmed roses remains as strong as during January. There never seems to be enough of these to meet the demand. American Beauties were held at top quotations most of last week. February 8 a few of the stores on Fifth avenue were obliged to give $1 each for the selects, but 75 cents may be quoted as generally the top, and the stock had to be choice to bring that figure. Hadley maintains its record values and all the novelties and special varieties hold at close to the quotations of a week ago.

Carnations have held up wonderfully until now. The best flowers broke to $4 per hundred February 10. This price was for the specialties only. Many thousands were sold at $3 per hundred and even as low as $20 per thousand.

Longiflorum lilies did not sell above $12 per hundred, although the long-stemmed and selected flowers were held by some of the wholesalers at 15 cents each. A good many were sold at $10 per hundred. Valley also was depressed, little of it selling above $4 per hundred. Gardenias are plentiful and the general quality is good. As high as $4 per dozen is realized for the best flowers.

There are too many short-stemmed tulips. It is hard to dispose of them at a price satisfactory to the growers. The supply of freesia is greater than the market desires and prices fell last week. The best of it, however, still holds at three bunches for $1. Callas are lower in price and shipments are increasing. Narcissi are in light supply, but daffodils are abundant. Last week 50 cents per hundred was top for violets, the cold weather being accountable for this figure. The first warm wave will see them on the street again.



The shipments of sweet peas are increasing and some of the Spencers are especially fine. There is a good assortment of daisies, mignonette, forget-me-nots and pansies. Orchids are abundant and prices lower.

Last week's business averages below normal. The prospects for a good St. Valentine's day business seemed bright, but at this writing it seems likely that there will be a shortage of roses and corsage flowers. Bulbous stock and carnations have been in overabundance, but roses few and far between. American Beauties do not seem to be in much demand. Some fine orchids arrive each week from Canada and sell readily.

BRAMPTON, ONT.

The coal situation is about the worst that has ever been experienced in this neighborhood. The embargo is still on, and what little fuel does get as far as Ontario is confiscated by the railways without discrimination. The florists are having a trying time of it. The Dale Estate's supply of coal fortunately has held out, otherwise none would have been able to borrow, beg or steal coal from any outside source.

Ever since Christmas extremely cold weather has prevailed, without a single day's relief, and this week it began with a temperature of 22 degrees below zero, making long-distance shipments decidedly risky, especially in the west.

It is reported that H. L. Janzen, of Kitchener, had seven houses frozen out on the night of February 11. Narrow escapes seem to have been common occurrences recently. W. G. P.

LOUISVILLE, KY.

The Market.

While the florists here have been reading and seeing evidences of the wonderful prosperity of the country, many of them think that their share of the golden stream has been somewhat slow in turning in Louisville's direction; but at last some of the florists feel safe in saying that they are beginning to realize on some of the golden harvest. Of course, we all know the Christmas business was the greatest in history, but until that time flowers had been in less demand.

During the last month, despite the bad weather conditions, the florists have been constantly taxed to their capacity in turning out work for various occasions. The greatest handicap has been the shortage of stock, especially roses and giganteum lilies. There is a marked shortage of Asparagus plumosus, Sprengeri and other greens, making it necessary to use quantities of leucothoe and mahonia sprays. At one store a great deal of redwood and other flat-leaved evergreens from Chicago were being worked up into funeral work.

Sweet peas and violets were expected in splendid crop for St. Valentine's day. The indications were that St. Valentine's day business would be close to a Christmas rush. Were it not for the pot plants, cyclamens, primulas and bulbous stock, the supply of flowers would not have been sufficient to meet the call. Many advance orders were booked by the stores for this day. The St. Valentine stickers produced by the Chicago Florists' Club and displayed by all local florists are said to have much to do with the advance in business for the day.

Carnations are arriving in larger quantities than in the past, are of good quality and meet with a ready sale. Calendulas, snapdragons and ten weeks' stocks are more abundant, thanks to a few bright days. Jonquils and narcissi are being cut in great quantities now and find a ready sale.

Society Meeting.

Many interesting facts came up at the meeting of the Kentucky Society of Florists held here February 7. Among other things, there was a plan for coöperative advertising. This was regarded favorably by most of the members.

A committee was appointed to investigate the chances and advisability of a flower show, to be held in conjunction with the State Horticultural Society. Advertising is the keynote of all modern business successes, but florists have been somewhat slow in adopting it. We think the fall show an excellent means of getting one's product before the public.

skirts of New Albany, Ind., read an instructive paper on his favorites. Mr. Kunzman is an authority on the dahlia, having made a specialty of this flower for a number of years. His showing of this flower last fall was enjoyed by a large number of people and did much to popularize the flower in Louisville.

Various Notes.

We regret to write of the death of the wife of George Rasmussen, manager of the A. Rasmussen greenhouses at New Albany. Mrs. Rasmussen passed away February 5.

D. L. Swift is at present bringing in some of the best Radiance roses the writer has ever seen. He also is cutting some excellent carnations. If the quantity were in keeping with the quality, Mr. Swift soon would be spending his winters at Palm Beach, hobnobbing with other plutocrats.

It is reported that one of the large local growers lost two houses of stock by frost during the cold snap.

T. H. Hustedt, of Midway, who has been devoting his time and business to cyclamen culture, has been meeting with unusual success. A special strain of his own growing is of great merit, the blooms, instead of the usual five or six petals, having from eight to eleven petals, besides being larger than the ordinary variety. Mr. Hustedt sold his entire output of blooming plants to one concern at Christmas, and the space is now occupied by transplanted seedlings.

John Ruysenaars, head decorator for F. Walker & Co., journeyed to Owensboro, Ky., last week to execute a wedding decoration. Mr. Ruysenaars has acquired a reputation as a master of art in floral decorations.

At the store of the William Walker Co. this week the passer-by was greeted by a clever St. Valentine window.

BULB GROWING IN HOLLAND.

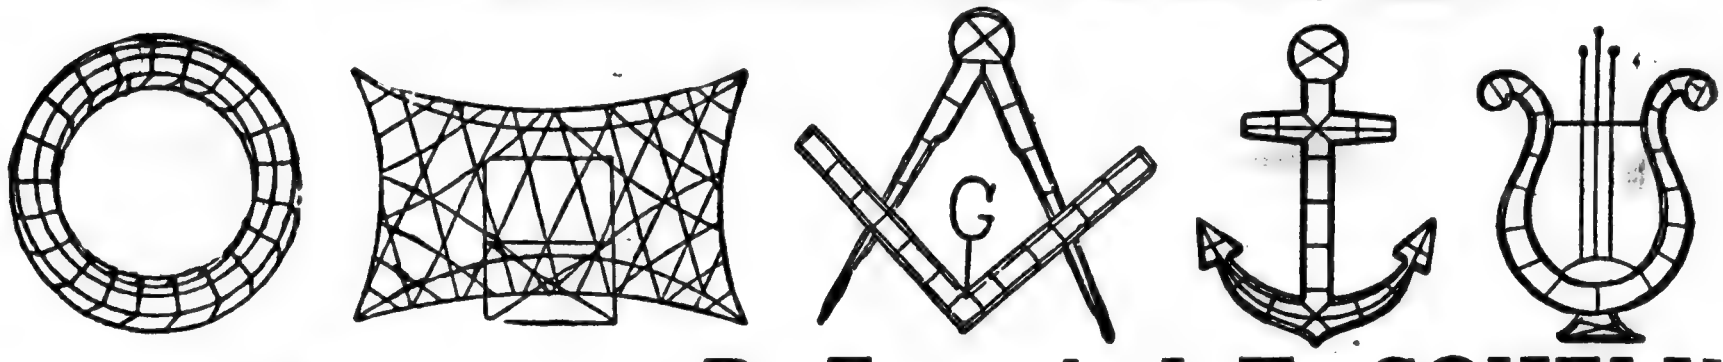
small worm and it killed acres of daffodils. In fact, we do not know whether in five years we shall have a daffodil left in Holland if some method is not found soon of delivering us from this pest. The worms are hard to kill. Some of them were kept in iron boxes for a long time, and they seemed entirely shriveled up. However, a little water was put on them and they soon were as bright and merry as ever.

The only way to destroy them, as far as now known, is to steam them out, but that method costs $2,200 per acre and such an outlay would not pay.

The daffodil, like the tulip, propagates itself. The bulb simply splits up into various smaller ones.

After the bulbs are dug, those of the selling size are at once selected and are put in crates in equal numbers, and in these same crates they are shipped abroad.



A great revolution has taken place in the varieties of daffodils. Both English and Dutch enthusiasts in the last few years have turned their efforts to the production of newer and better varieties, and their endeavors have met with wonderful success. Beautiful shapes and rare colors have been attained, and it will not be long before nearly all the varieties which we now use will have to give up their places to the newer ones.

One fact which applies to hyacinths, tulips and daffodils is that we cut the flowers before they are ripe. If left to ripen they would go to seed, and this would not only take too much strength out of the bulb, but a certain fungus would grow in the plants and would soon spread to the leaves, killing the plants long before the bulbs had attained their full growth.

FRENCH HYDRANGEAS.

Will you kindly give me some information regarding our French hydrangeas? They are potbound and seem to have stopped growing. Their foliage is dropping. They are in 3-inch pots.

G. F. C.—Tenn.

You cannot do much with hydrangeas of any kind in 3-inch pots. While you do not say so, I assume that these were propagated last year. In order to get any growth on them the balls should have been loosened and the plants given a shift into 4¼-inch pots. It may not be too late to do this even now, but you must not expect plants of this size to do much for you in the way of flowers. If you will root some cuttings this month or in March and grow them along carefully, you ought to have plants fit for at least 7-inch pots before fall, and these, if well ripened, will make splendid stock for another season. or chicken manure cure this trouble? We have sold many araucarias of this variety and most of them are doing well, but three or four customers have complained of the ailing condition described above. One buyer made us exchange the dead plants for a fern, afterward informing us that he had given the araucarias a dressing of chicken manure. We have a plant in the house that was fed with liquid ammonia and a "plant food." The outside roots were dead when the plant was removed from the pot. Any suggestions as to this trouble and its cause will be appreciated.

W. C. F. C.—Can.

There is no doubt that the araucarias in question were victims of too strong fertilizers, chicken manure and liquid ammonia being altogether too much for these plants. The only safe fertilizer to use for araucarias is either well rotted stable manure or a little bone dust. Either of these is better used in the potting soil than as a top-dressing. A 6-inch potful of bone dust to a good wheelbarrow load of soil is a safe proportion, and the stable manure may be used in the proportion of one part of manure to five parts of soil. W. H. T.

PLANTS FOR CHRISTMAS.

Kindly advise me through The Review when I should sow seeds of solanums, Begonia Gloire de Chatelaine and Impatiens Sultani, so as to have nice plants for Christmas. W. C. H.—Pa.

Sow the solanum seed now. At the proper time prick them off into flats; then pot them off singly. They should be gradually hardened and planted outdoors early in May. Field-grown solanums are better in every way than pot-grown ones. Such fibrous-rooted begonias as Gloire de Chatelaine, Vernon, La Vesuve and Erfordii should be sown as soon as possible; also, Impatiens Sultani. The last-named is not exactly a Christmas plant, however, being at its best when the weather is warmest and being easily chilled in winter.

Lancaster, O.—Times have been prosperous in Lancaster, and when W. E. Gravett set out in a crowded interurban car for the new governor's inauguration at Columbus, a sleight-of-hand operator relieved him of a wallet containing $20. Mr. Gravett, however, was not broke. Before leaving home he divided the $75 in his pocketbook, placing the other $55 in a pocket which even the experts seldom attempt to negotiate.

The Market.

The wholesalers report an excellent demand last week for stock of all kinds. Carnations and roses were scarce, the supply being far short of the demand, and clean-up sales were reported daily. Prices were reasonable in all grades. The retailers report plenty of social work. The demand for flowers should be great this week on account of St. Valentine's day; a great rush is expected, especially for violets. These were expected to be quite plentiful. All local growers at present seem to be off crop on roses. Extra fine Russell, Ophelia and Killarney roses bring good, stiff prices. Carnations are sold at $4 per hundred for choice stock, and the stock coming in is fine. The Enchantress varieties are in the majority and have the call over other varieties, although Matchless, Beacon and Ward sell well.

There is a decided scarcity of Easter lilies and callas. These had a big demand during the week. Jonquils and tulips are cleaning up daily at good prices. Choice jonquils bring $4 per hundred and tulips $3 per hundred. Fancy butterfly sweet peas clean up daily at good prices, with the common varieties at lower prices. The best in the fancies bring $1 per hundred. Forced white lilac sells well at $1.50 per bunch and Paper Whites bring $2.50 per hundred.

In greens there are plenty of galax, flat fern and smilax. Plumosus and adiantum were scarce last week.

Club Meeting.

The St. Louis Florists' Club held an interesting meeting February 8 in the salesrooms of the George Angermueller wholesale house. The big feature of the meeting was an exhibition of cut flowers, which was staged in the center of the room. W. A. Rowe, of Kirkwood, staged carnations, snapdragons, jonquils, calendulas and freesias. G. M. Thost, of De Soto, Mo., had a vase of good forget-me-nots and snapdragons. Joseph Hauser, of Webster Groves, showed extra fine violets. O. C. May exhibited sweet peas and jonquils of exceptionally good quality. M. F. Widmer, of Highland, Ill., had a vase of fancy carnations.

The meeting was well attended, there being about fifty members and a number of visitors present. After the preliminaries, committees were called on for reports. The report of the spring flower show committee was interesting, and a great success seems assured.

Applications for membership were received from Ivan Erickson, of the Blossom Shop, and A. B. McIntire, of the Missouri Botanical Garden. The committee on the applications of Martin Seeger and Guy Reburn reported favorably and the applicants' election followed.

A letter from Theodore Wirth, chairman of the S. A. F. convention garden committee, stated that if the National Flower Show and the S. A. F. convention are held at the same time, April, 1918, there would be no need of a convention garden. After a lengthy discussion it was decided to ask the executive board of the S. A. F., which meets in New York next month, that the S. A. F. convention be held in conjunction with the National Flower Show, April, 1918. In that event there would be no need of a convention garden.

J. F. Ammann, president of the American Carnation Society, was then called on for a report of the recent meeting and exhibition of the society held at Indianapolis. W. J. Pilcher, W. A. Rowe and S. E. Cerny, who also attended the meeting, gave their reports.

Messrs. Guy, Fillmore and Beyer were appointed judges of the flowers on exhibition. A rising vote of thanks was extended to Mr. Angermueller for the use of his place for the meeting. After adjournment the members partook of refreshments and cigars. Then "Billy" Smith in his happy way auctioned off the flowers on exhibition to the highest bidders. The next meeting of the club will be held March 8, one week before the spring flower show opens.

Various Notes.

The St. Louis Seed Co. February 6 sustained a heavy loss from a fire which started in the building next door. The greater part of the damage was done by water and the extreme cold. The entire front of the building was covered with a thick cake of ice and entrance to the building was gained only by the back door. It is estimated that the loss will reach $27,000, as the building was heavily stocked in preparation for the spring rush. All orders, however, are being filled to the letter and counter trade has again commenced.

Mrs. A. Eigenbrod, of Woodlawn, suffered a loss by fire February 9. She and her sons battled the fire until assistance came from brother florists. A. Kopp, Joseph Deutschmann, S. E. Cerny, W. A. Rowe, O. C. May, Joseph Meyers and Philip Goebel, Jr., responded and helped to save part of the range. It is said the loss will amount to nearly $1,000, and this is a severe hardship to the proprietress, who has eight children.

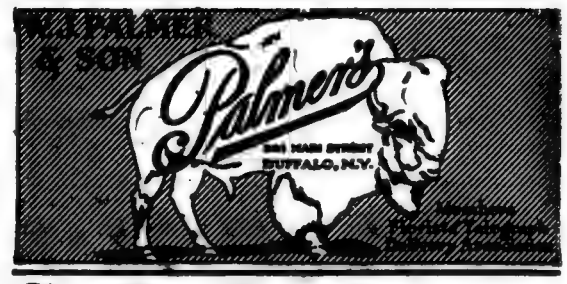
Raymond Welty, of the St. Louis Wholesale Cut Flower Co.; Harry Slechter, with George Angermueller; Paddy Patton, of the W. C. Smith Wholesale Floral Co., and George Schriefer, with C. A. Kuehn, report that orders for cut flowers and supplies have been excellent. Phone and telegraph orders from near-by towns kept them busy every day.



Visitors last week were George Hampton, of J. G. Neidinger Co., Philadelphia; E. J. Fancourt, of the S. S. Pennock-Meehan Co., Philadelphia; J. J. Karins, representing Henry A. Dreer, Inc., Philadelphia; Mr. Young, of the Young Tool Co., Casey, Ill., and A. Dygard, of Louisiana, Mo.

The florists from near-by towns who visited the market last week were George Madsen, of Alton, Ill.; M. F. Widmer, of Highland, Ill.; J. F. Ammann and H. Blixen, of Edwardsville, Ill.; Edward Denker, of St. Charles, Mo.; W. E. Guy, G. Grossart, W. E. Ogle and M. Schoenberger, of Belleville, Ill.; W. J. Pilcher, W. A. Rowe, William Edwards, Philip Goebel, Jr., S. E. Cerny and Joseph Hauser, of Kirkwood. These attended the club meeting February 8.

Arthur Y. Ellison, for the last four years with the Mullanphy downtown store, has resigned his position and will take charge of W. C. Smith's greenhouse establishment in Kirkwood.

The Market.

The inevitable decline in prices arrived a few days ago, due to a big increase in the arrivals of bulbous flowers, sweet peas and carnations, and values in some cases have been more than cut in two. Roses for some reason have not been moving well, and prices have sagged, especially on short-stemmed stock. American Beauties hold their own, but the demand is not great. Fancy

Ophelia, Russell, Hadley, Stanley and Sunburst also hold up well. Carnations have declined in sympathy with other flowers. Violets, with the nearness of Valentine's day, took on a brace. Sweet peas are abundant. Fancy stock brings $2; such stock is carried on 18-inch to 20-inch stems. Short stock makes only one-fourth of these prices.

Mignonette is more plentiful and sells from $3 per hundred upward. Marguerites are more abundant, but sell out easily. The demand for these from New York and other cities is good; also for bachelor's buttons. Dutch bulbous stock is in heavy supply and has taken a decided slump. Golden Spurs, which a week ago made $4 to $5 per hundred, now are sold at $1.50 to $2, and tulips have made a similar decline. Paper Whites, Romans and lilies are weak. Lily of the valley was in good demand for St. Valentine's day. Cattleyas drag a good deal, but gardenias show an improvement. Asparagus moves better with the passing of stevia.

The Anniversary Banquet.

The banquet at Horticultural hall to celebrate the thirtieth anniversary of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club of Boston proved to be a great success. The attendance was 275. The stage and tables were beautifully decorated with choice plants and cut flowers. For two previous years the banquet had been held at the New American House, but the desire to come back to the hall, with its less cramped quarters, found almost unanimous approval. President Methven, who had just recovered from an attack of the grip, introduced A. P. Calder as toastmaster, and Mr. Calder lived up to his reputation of a silver-tongued orator in every way. R. M. Saltonstall, president of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, spoke on the work of that society, now 88 years old, specially emphasizing the desirability that all gardeners and florists support the big March and June exhibitions. He was enthusiastically applauded.

William J. Stewart, the founder of the club and its first president, spoke interestingly of some of the early work of the club and mentioned the reasons for its first coming into existence. A. K. Rogers, vice-president, thanked everyone for their generous support in helping to make the banquet so decided a success. W. N. Craig spoke of the desirability of supporting the Massachusetts Horticultural Society; also of the cósmopolitan character of the club. He concluded by moving a resolution of united support to President Wilson in the present international crisis, which was unanimously carried.

Entertainment during the evening was furnished by James Singer, Miss Lewis, Miss Singer, Miss I. McPherson and M. Eastman. An orchestra furnished plenty of inspiring music during the banquet and later in the evening for dancing, the evening proving to be a most delightful and successful one in every way.

At the meeting of the club February 20 carnations will hold the center of the stage and there will be a notable display of new and standard varieties, with short talks by several noted specialists. It also will be application night, and more new members will be admitted than for a long time.

Massachusetts Horticultural Society.

At Horticultural hall February 10 Prof. F. W. Rane, state forester of Massachusetts, spoke on "Some Recent Troubles with Forest Trees," speaking chiefly on the white pine blister rust, gypsy moth, caterpillar and chestnut bark disease. He did not advance any new information concerning any of these troubles. Several in the audience spoke against the suggested prohibition of imports of all nursery stock.

John L. Smith, gardener to A. W. Preston, showed a well flowered plant of the beautiful Brasso-Lælia-Cattleya Seaforth Highlanda. The flowers have immense lips, fully five inches in diameter. This was awarded a silver medal.

At Horticultural hall February 17 Dr. W. E. Castle, of the Bussey Institution, Jamaica Plain, will give an illustrated lecture on "Biological Principles of Plant and Animal Breeding."

William H. Elliott, when last heard from, was in the Grand cañon of Arizona, en route to California. He is inspecting many commercial establishments on his way across the continent.

W. S. Phelps, of Lexington, grows a number of specialties which are handled by but few local growers. He has splendid lots of anemones, ranunculi and hardy delphiniums. The latter now are about a foot in height and look promising.

Andrew Christensen, of Stoneham, next season will try several new carnations, including Albert Roper, Christmas Cheer and Doris. Of the older varieties,

If all conventions used them in anything like the same ratio, more local plant houses would be needed.

Charles Walter, of Stoughton, is having great success with sweet peas this season. His Spencers at present are of exceptional quality. He also has Golden Spur and other narcissi.

C. T. Beasley & Co., of East Milton, are picking a grand lot of pansies now. They are the largest local specialists in this flower. They are also specializing in double English daisies and polyanthus. They have recently installed a large new Page boiler, which proves to be a great heater.

Seed Trade News

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

President, Kirby B. White, Detroit, Mich.; Secretary-Treasurer, C. E. Kendel, Cleveland, O. Thirty-fifth annual convention, Detroit, June 19 to 21, 1917.

VISITED CHICAGO: James Smalley, of McPherson, Kan.

THE government crop experts have figured the acreage of Bermuda onions in Texas this year as 11,853, as compared to 10,057 last year.

B. F. BROWN, of the Brown Bag-Filling Machine Co., says the seed packet department of the factory is full up with orders and working twenty-four hours per day.

THERE are several seed catalogues printed in German, but probably the only one in America printed in the Hungarian language is that of Kallay Bros. Co., Painesville, O.

ALTHOUGH the Senate committee omitted the provision for free seeds when reporting the agricultural appropriation bill, it was put back in the bill before the bill was sent to conference.

THE big freeze in the south, commented on last week as having been felt in a quick demand upon seedsmen, has proved a greater factor than was foreseen. The losses appear to have been great and widely distributed.

C. A. BURNHAM, sales manager for Northrup, King & Co., Minneapolis, says that, although prices are high, he does not expect there will be such a shortage of seeds this season as will keep anyone from planting, if not the preferred article, then something "just as good." He expects a general broadening of the demand because of the propaganda for the diversification of crops in the northern states.

THOMAS J. GREY CO., Boston, is starting the 1917 season in a new home at 16 and 17 South Market street, where the building has been remodeled with a new front and two additional stories. Thomas J. Grey no longer has any connection with the company, the officers of which are: President, J. P. A. Guerineau; vice-president, R. E. Montgomery; treasurer, Arthur F. Barney; secretary, Peter M. Miller. The business is entirely retail.

THE seedsmen's representatives who attended the canners' convention at Cleveland last week were not in position to accept any considerable part of the spot delivery business that was offered, except on peas, which were not in special request, but a pleasant time was enjoyed by all when it came to booking future orders. It was the largest meeting of canners yet held and practically every seed house that caters to this class of trade was represented by one or more salesmen. Prices formed the chief topic of conversation and it was the consensus that one is safe in buying at present prices anything nature produces.

We have over and above our contract requirements for 1916 and 1917

A Surplus of High-grade Vegetable and Flower Seeds

which we offer at attractive prices considering market conditions at home and abroad. Our contracts were placed with the largest and most reliable growers in the world, and their names will be furnished upon request.

TOMATO SEED FOR YOUR 1917 CROP

You will get an enormous crop of Tomatoes from Bolgiano's Tomato Seed this year. Our Seed was saved from one of the largest crops we have ever had, due to being favored by weather conditions. The vines were loaded with Large, Solid, Red Fruit. We know positively by planting Seed from this "Big Crop" your yield will be much larger than if you had bought seed grown where the weather conditions were not favorable.

LOSS BY ST. LOUIS SEED CO.

With insurance of $31,500 on stock, in thirteen companies, and $3,000 on fixtures, the St. Louis Seed Co., St. Louis, Mo., was fully covered on the loss sustained February 4, when the roof of its 4-story building at 411-13 Washington avenue was broken through by the falling chimney of a burning building next door. About one-eighth of the roof area collapsed. The damage to stock was principally by water, the fire, which damaged nearly a dozen buildings in the vicinity, being stopped before it did much injury to the seed store. That the loss from water was not larger was due to the seed stock being covered with tarpaulins by the salvage corps. Mail order business was interrupted for only a few hours and counter trade was resumed after two or three days.

This is the second time within three years the St. Louis Seed Co. has suffered from its neighbors, several lives having been lost when the walls of an adjoining burning building collapsed in 1914, burying the seed store with several of its employees and many other persons.

TOTAL SEED IMPORTS FOR LAST FISCAL YEAR.

The Review of August 24, page 62, contained a tabulated statement of the imports of seeds, with the duties paid, during the first three quarters of the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1915. The Review of November 9, page 58, continued the data to the end of the fiscal year. The records for each quarter were given separately, as compiled by the United States Department of Commerce. In the following table the amounts in the quarterly reports are combined, so as to show the total imports of each kind of seed for the entire fiscal year, July 1, 1915, to June 30, 1916:

CAN USE OPAQUE ENVELOPES.

Seeds put up in opaque sealed envelopes, properly labeled, would appear to constitute "proprietary articles of merchandise and be mailable at fourth-class rates," as set forth in Sec. 469, Par. 5, instead of requiring transparent envelopes (Par. 4). This is a new ruling obtained December 20, 1916, from the Third Assistant Postmaster General's office by Howard M. Earl, of W. Atlee Burpee & Co., member of the executive committee of the American Seed Trade Association.

MANN KILLS MISBRANDING BILL.

Seedsmen and nurserymen who were opposed to the Barkley Misbranding Bill need have no fear of its adoption at this session of Congress. On the objection of Congressman Mann, of Illinois, the measure was stricken from the Unanimous Consent calendar. This action effectively kills it so far as the present session of Congress is concerned, although Congressman Barkley contemplates its reintroduction early during the next session.

The objection against the bill on the part of the nursery and seed interests arose when it was found that they would be likely to get into difficulties in marking packets of seeds, bundles of trees, etc., because of the fact that it would be easy to innocently misbrand where varieties so closely resemble each other.

Mr. Barkley has taken the contentions of the representatives of these lines under consideration and in all probability when the bill is reintroduced at the next session of Congress it will contain a provision exempting seeds and nursery stock where the misbranding occurs innocently.

The Barkley bill has the approval of a great many trade organizations in other lines of business, and it will doubtlessly go through shortly after the new session of Congress convenes. Nursery and seed trade representatives have stated that they would interpose no further objections if the amendments they desire are adopted. C. L. L.

NEW TWISTS IN CONTRACTS.

A recent case before the Mississippi Supreme court draws attention to an interesting and important rule of law governing the making of contracts of sale.

In this case the plaintiff agreed to buy from the defendant 450 bushels of peas. After this contract had been made by telegraph, the buyer sent a letter of confirmation, in which was included the statement, "Kindly take precaution and have them thoroughly cleaned, seeing that they are in first-class condition." This letter was not received by defendant, or seller, until after 175 bushels of the peas had been shipped, and he then refused to make further delivery on the ground that he had not agreed to sell peas cleaned and of first-class stock, although the buyer made frequent requests for completion of delivery under the contract. The buyer then sued for damages for such non-delivery and showed that he had to buy substitute peas in the open market, at a higher price than that at which the defendant had agreed to sell. In holding that the buyer was entitled to recover such damages, the court said:

"If the sort of peas mentioned in the plaintiff's letter were not the kind stipulated for in the original contract, the defendant could have insisted on the plaintiff standing by the contract and receiving the peas contracted for. The plaintiff received and paid for 175 bushels of the peas contracted for, and the defendant could not relieve himself from his contract without offering to carry it out under the terms as originally stipulated. The defendant not only failed to tender a performance of his part of the contract, but repudiated the contract by the positive refusal on his part to carry it out."

In other words, the court holds that after a contract of sale has been made, the seller has no right to regard it as repudiated by the buyer merely because the latter asks for delivery of a higher quality of goods than covered by the agreement. But the decision is not inconsistent with the well settled rule of law that the buyer's insistence that a better grade than the contract quality be delivered would amount to a repudiation of the original contract.

The decision applies the fundamental legal principle that after a contract has been once finally made, it is not affected by any new terms that one party may seek to impose without the consent of the other. Of course, the buyer in this case might have imposed the condition that the peas be cleaned and that they be of first-class stock, in accepting the seller's offer to sell. But an acceptance of the offer without such condition waived that right S.

several prizes at the Panama-Pacific Exposition.

Beckert's Seed Store, Pittsburgh, Pa.—A highly creditable sort of catalogue, accurate in text and of excellent quality in typography and illustrations; sixty-eight pages and colored cover. Besides seeds, the book offers plants, bulbs, roots, tubers, insecticides, fertilizers, implements and miscellaneous supplies.

The Imlay Co., Zanesville, O.—Thirty-fourth annual catalogue of seeds, bulbs, plants, trees and shrubs, "a silent solicitor for your business"; forty-eight pages, illustrated, in a plain but attractive cover. The company's disclaimer of warranty is preceded by the pointed statement that "more failures result from disregard of the conditions necessary to germination than from inferiority of the seeds used."

J. K. Alexander, East Bridgewater, Mass.—Two catalogues, general and wholesale, of dahlias and other plants. The general catalogue is well illustrated and consists of sixty-eight pages; the wholesale list is condensed to eight pages and cover. Besides the Alexander specialties, such as dahlias, gladioli, cannas, phloxes, peonies and irises, the general catalogue offers ornamental shrubbery, fruit-bearing stock, flower seeds, etc. The general catalogue also contains several pages of carefully considered cultural directions.

Thos. J. Grey Co., Boston, Mass.—General seed catalogue, comprising lists, also, of vegetable roots and plants, bulbs, roses, nursery stock, implements, etc.; 108 pages, well illustrated, and bound in a cover of the quiet-toned but artistic style which distinguishes this company's catalogues. The list of tools and other equipments is of wide scope and interesting character, occupying about twenty pages.

Spring Hill Nurseries, Tippecanoe City, O.—A 64-page, illustrated catalogue of nursery stock, vegetable roots, roses, perennials, bulbs, window boxes, plant tubs and tools. Among the specialties are dwarf fruit trees. Much information is supplied with reference to distances in planting, number of plants per acre, trees and shrubs for special purposes, etc.

Metzner Floral Co., Mountain View, Cal.—A 20-page catalogue of gladioli, petunias, carnations, geraniums and miscellaneous flowering plants; also flower seeds, and both seeds and plants of "Metzner's Peerless Pansies." The specialty is the Metzner collection of gladioli, which won prizes at the Panama-Pacific Exposition.

Elmer D. Smith & Co., Adrian, Mich.—"Florists' wholesale list" of the company's specialty, chrysanthemums, with illustrations. It is a selective, rather than an exhaustive or specially comprehensive list, and yet the sixteen closely packed pages provide ample choice for the discriminative grower, whether large-flowering sorts, pompons, anemones or singles are wanted. Five new commercial varieties of the company's origination are offered for 1917. Assortments of "exhibition varieties for florists' use" are listed on the last page. "We are the only firm in America growing chrysanthemums exclusively," says the catalogue. "We have been originating new varieties since 1890 and have sent out over 300 of our own origin. Of the imported varieties we buy such as in our judgment should be given a place among the good things."

James Vick's Sons, Rochester, N. Y.—Two attractive catalogues, as separate representatives of the nursery and seed departments. Both are illustrated. "Vick's Fruit and Ornamental Tree Book" contains thirty-two pages, in a tasteful black and white cover. "Vick's Garden and Floral Guide" contains 112 pages, in an equally tasteful colored cover. Deciduous shrubs, aside from hedge plants, are not listed in the nursery book, but have a place in the seed book, along with roses and hardy plants. The guarantee in the nursery book seems explicit enough to make misunderstandings difficult: "We exercise care to have our stock genuine and reliable, and hereby guarantee that if all, substantially all, or any part of stock delivered does not prove true to name as ordered, we will replace it free of charge, or refund the money paid for it, that being the measure of damages for a breach of the contract."

The D. Hill Nursery Co., Dundee, Ill.—Wholesale catalogue of nursery stock, in sizes varying from large specimens to young stock for lining or bedding out; twenty-four pages, illustrated. Evergreens, for vase, tub, window box and the open ground, are the specialty and therefore have chief prominence in the book, but the lists also comprise deciduous stock, such as roses, shrubs, shade trees and fruit tree stocks. Tree seeds and florists' forcing stock also are offered. In the introductory paragraphs are these succinct phrases: "Good Hill quality evergreens do not just happen. We put the Hill quality into them deliberately in numerous ways."

Garland Mfg. Co., Des Plaines, Ill.—"Garland Guide Book No. 17," a handsome portfolio of pictures of greenhouses, ventilating apparatus, Garland cast-iron gutters and other greenhouse equipments, with descriptions that are intended to be "complete and comprehensive, giving the salient points of every house or part described." It contains eighteen unusually large pages, printed on a fine quality of enameled paper and bound in a tasteful green and red cover. Enclosed is a "question blank for greenhouse estimate."

South Bend, Ind.—The South Bend Floral Co., 216 South Michigan street, is getting ready to move into its new store on Michigan street, just half a block from the present location.

Any novelties, produced by any individual, that we may decide to adopt, after making careful investigation, we then proceed to give our own trying tests before cataloguing.

When they come to you, you can depend on their doing exactly what the catalogue says they will.

In spite of the war having so generally upset things over here, we have succeeded in bringing out our usual number of choice new things.

Our catalogue is so elaborate and expensive to produce that you will readily appreciate why we make a small charge of 35c for a copy, but this is promptly refunded when your orders amount to $5.00 or more.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

The Market.

Business continues on the upward grade most of the time. We have had two or three rather quiet days, but the remainder of the time we have been busy indeed. Social functions have been many, and the demand for all sorts of decorations has been large. Flowers, fortunately, have been more plentiful and prices are reaching their normal condition. The weather has been cold and the greehousemen have been exceedingly active in keeping the fires going continually at full blast.

Stock arrives in fair condition and moves favorably. A good supply was predicted for St. Valentine's day, and greater business than ever before was looked for on that day. Roses are in fine shape and good shipments of Sunburst, Montrose, White Killarney, Maryland and Stanley supply all demands. There is, however, a small supply of short-stemmed stock, many of which are needed for design work. The carnation crop has been somewhat heavier this week and prices have become easier. Easter lilies and callas are not coming along fast, but, then, the demand is not extra large.

There is a splendid supply of bulbous flowers, including jonquils and Paper Whites. Tulips sell well and the demand for sweet peas is large. Violets have sold more easily this week. Orchids and gardenias are in good shape and sell well. Valley moves quite slowly. Most of the stores have been considerably handicapped several days this week on account of the scarcity of plumosus, which has arrived from the south in a frozen condition.

Various Notes.

James Vick's Sons had an attractive display of garden and farm seeds at the poultry show held during the week of February 5. George Case was in charge. Will H. Dildine made a flying trip to New York in the interests of the firm. He reports business as being fairly active.

The business carried on by the late Fred W. Vick, of Ridgeway avenue, has been sold to Chester Ament, of this city, who will continue to grow about the same line of stock as his predecessor. The greenhouses are well stocked and business is good.

The monthly meeting of the Rochester Florists' Association was held February 12. H. Tanner was scheduled to speak on credit coöperation.

An attractive valentine window was seen at the store of Salter Bros. A large heart made of hearts and arrows was placed in the corner of the display. Towards the center were two large pillars, trimmed in blue and gold, from which was draped white net to the front of the window. A profusion of double daffodils were artistically arranged about the window, giving the whole a dainty effect.

Stephen D. Green, of H. Bayersdorfer & Co., Philadelphia, had a good display of supplies, including many novelties, at the Seneca hotel February 9. Morris Cohen, of New York, also called on the trade with his line of Easter chiffons.

The opening of the Rosery, the new flower store under the management of Paul Campus, took place February 10. The store, which is newly decorated, was nicely arranged with a good supply of palms, ferns and blooming plants. Miss Rose E. Brown is an employee.

PACIFIC COAST DEPARTMENT

Woodburn, Ore.—W. C. King now is owner of the florists' business formerly conducted by N. S. Nehl.

Montebello, Cal. — The Henry W. Turner place now has about four acres of glass, nearly all in roses. The cut is sold in Los Angeles, but the output of plants, approximating 500,000 a year, goes all over the United States.

Eureka, Cal.—The Cottage Gardens Nurseries, C. W. Ward, president, recently acquired a tract of land near San Jose, where a selling agency will be established and such stock grown as does better there than at Eureka.

EVERGREEN VINE FOR WALL.

Can you recommend some kind of evergreen vine, with a neat, compact habit, to be grown on a wall in this Oregon climate? The wall is four feet high. We already have English ivy and the Virginia creeper. We want something that will make a quick growth.

F. W.—Ore.

Euonymus radicans is a splendid, hardy, evergreen vining plant. It grows best in partly shaded locations. It must have rich soil. S. W. W.

LOS ANGELES.

The Market.

The market has been a most difficult one to follow. First there were a few days when stock was plentiful; then for some unaccountable reason the supply fell off; later it was more than plentiful. The weather now has much to do with the supply, but, as mentioned recently, there is no doubt that prices from now on will favor the buyer, and stock will be of better quality.

Carnations are improving and daffodils will be plentiful by the time this report appears. Freesias have held up in price on account of the shortage, but these from now on will be more plentiful. There is a large supply of violets, but the demand keeps it well cleaned up. Sweet peas are opening more freely and if the weather continues favorable there will be an abundance of them shortly; a sudden hot spell, such as we sometimes get at this time of year, would, of course, be bad for them. All small flowers are more plentiful. Gladioli are scarce, but the demand is not great. There is a better grade of Easter lilies in the market than usual at this time, but the price rules high. For big decorations these and the shrub branches, such as double peaches, almonds and the various acacias, are fine.

Indoor roses are about as last reported, and there is nothing of any consequence in this line from outdoors. Valley is coming into the market in small lots, but not nearly enough to fill the demand. Cattleyas are scarce and phalænopsis and other small orchids are not so plentiful as they were. In greens the better kinds are still scarce, but a few warm weeks will change the situation. Pot plants are scarce.

We are much pleased with the results of our plant advertisements in The Review; orders have come in freely and from a wide range of territory.

Germain Plant & Seed Co.
Los Angeles, California. By M. L. Germain, Pres.

Business picked up considerably later in the week, some good funeral work and several large decorations making the retailers busy. The bright weather is bringing people out and it is not too hot to be pleasant. This makes transient business good and cleans up a lot of small stock.

Various Notes.

Bernard Tassano, of the Santa Cruz Evergreen Co., gave a dinner to a number in the trade on the occasion of his birthday. He proved to be a good host, as everyone present thoroughly enjoyed the evening.

George Eischen, of Ocean Park, has opened a branch store at Venice plaza, where he proposes to retail cut flowers, plants, seeds and bulbs. Everyone will wish him success.

Darling's Flower Shop has had an exceptionally busy week. The funeral of the late John Joyce called for a large amount of work of an exceptionally good character, orchids and high-priced stock generally being used. Then the opening of the new $1,000,000 Garden courts at Hollywood called for big lots of choice flowers, among them being fifty dozen extra long Russell roses, big banks of Easter lilies and large quantities of phalænopsis and other orchids. This was one of the most important jobs of the season so far.

Frank Lichtenberg has gone on a business trip to San Francisco and points farther north, Mrs. Lichtenberg accompanying him.

Walter Armacost & Co. are sending in a fine cut of Easter lilies and a good line of potted hyacinths. The stock sells on sight.

H. A. Turner, of Montebello, has purchased a new 6-cylinder car.

Morris Goldenson was caught working one day this week, a pretty sure sign that business must be rushing. A large quantity of good funeral work has been handled at the store.

Freeman's window of spring flowers this week was one of the prettiest things seen for a long time.

At Howard & Smith's store spring flowers from the Montebello nurseries are making a grand display, especially the bulbous flowers. Several good decorations have kept the staff busy during the last two weeks, and in the nursery department the new rose, Los Angeles, is still among the best sellers.

rider of a motorcycle just outside his nursery. At the present writing it is not known whether or not the motorcyclist was killed, but he at least was seriously injured. Naturally, Mr. Coolidge is much upset over the matter, but everyone present agrees that it was purely accidental and quite unavoidable.

W. W. Felgate, at Sierra Madre, has a magnificent bed of Nemesia strumosa, in all colors. This beautiful annual is exceptionally well suited to southern California conditions, the dry atmosphere being similar to that of its native home in South Africa. Mr. Felgate has grown and exhibited it for several years and it is strange that such a beautiful subject is not more generally grown.

Heavy out-of-town shipments and a correspondingly heavy local demand have kept the supply of freesias down at the Murata & Co. store, notwithstanding the big arrivals daily.

At the monthly meeting of the Los Angeles County Horticultural Society, held in the Times building, February 7, the election of officers for 1917 took place. Richards and the officers, making seven in all. F. Lewin, an amateur rose grower of Inglewood, spoke on the culture of roses, and some excellent vocal solos were rendered by Mrs. Hayden.

The Market.

Stock is more plentiful and business in general gives no ground for complaint. Taken all in all, the condition of the market is healthy, although heavier supplies of certain kinds of flowers could be disposed of without difficulty. A few more days of warm weather should bring out an abundance of all seasonables. Daffodils seem to overshadow everything else at present and prices have dropped sharply. They fill in nicely and the liberal offerings continue to clean up readily, especially in view of an active shipping demand. Freesia has been especially fine this year and maintains its popularity well, the best quality being used largely for corsage work. Paper Whites show excellent quality. Tulips and hyacinths are eagerly sought, both demanding comparatively high prices. As a matter of fact, spring flowers as a whole are bringing higher prices this season than ever before, with the possible exception of last year's. Easter lilies are much in evidence, but callas are scarce. Valley is a little easier by reason of the increased supply. Limited supplies of pansies and daisies are welcomed.

American Beauties are still rather scarce. Other varieties of roses are in good supply, but all stock clears from day to day. Carnations are fairly plentiful, but they hold their own, no recession in prices being noted. Violets show some improvement, but the quality is hardly up to standard, the stems being short on account of the continued cold weather and little rain. A heavy shipping demand for St. Valentine's day was reported. There are plenty of orchids for all requirements, though hardly so many as last week. Flowering shrubs and blooming plants have filled a real need during the scarcity of cut flowers and have been greatly appreciated. Many sales would have been lost had not the florists been able to interest visitors in plants when they failed to find the cut flowers they desired. A shortage of ferns, maidenhair and asparagus is causing some inconvenience.

Various Notes.

The E. W. McLellan Co. shipped more violets for St. Valentine's day than ever before, which, in the opinion of J. A. Axell, shows that the florists of the middle west appreciate California-grown violets more each year.

Domoto Bros. report plant importations from Japan coming through in good shape.

Frank D. Pelicano is introducing a new violet, which he hopes to produce extensively another year. It is the same shade as Quaker Lady, but has a double flower. It has a good stem and is fine for corsages.

H. Plath is bringing in some fine azaleas.

A partial change has taken place in the ownership of the Art Floral Co. Julius Eppstein sold his stock to K. Lewis, who subsequently turned it over to the company. P. Vincent Matraia continues as president and manager. Mr. Eppstein has taken over the branch of the Art Floral Co. in the St. Francis hotel, which he operated before consolidating with the company three years ago. In the future he will conduct that store under his own name.

MacRorie & McLaren decorated the Hotel Oakland for the Sherman ball, using quantities of carnations, woodwardia ferns, smilax, palms and eucalypti.

C. Kooyman has a nice cut of Killarneys and Richmond.

F. J. Bertrand, manager of the B. M. Joseph store, has no complaints to make, as business is active in all branches and stock is good.

Pelicano & Ginocchio, proprietors of the Frank D. Pelicano dahlia farm, have issued their 1917 catalogue of California field-grown bulbs. Special feature is made of Mr. Pelicano's new decorative dahlia, Dr. Harry L. Tevis, which was awarded first prize for new seedling dahlias at the P. P. I. E.; also first prizes at the 1916 shows of the California Dahlia Society and the California Dahlia Growers' Association. An invitation is extended to visitors to call at the farm.

The Sacramento Valley Rose Growers' Association has elected the following officers for the ensuing year: President, Frank B. Gilliam; vice-president, Mrs. N. H. McAnston; secretary, M. H. Jellison; corresponding secretary, F. M. Porter; treasurer, Temple Crane.

A large white dahlia, one of the latest creations of Luther Burbank, is to be the official flower of Oakland. Mr. Burbank in a letter to the Oakland Chamber of Commerce offered to name the dahlia for the city, and the offer was accepted.

Improvements at C. Navlet's store at San Jose, Cal., which have been in progress for several months, are about completed. An elaborate formal opening is being planned. At the Navlet flower stand in the Emporium, San Francisco, Manager Picetti reports business satisfactory.

Podesta & Baldocchi have had a busy week. A wedding and a funeral kept the force working overtime. This house has been making a prominent feature of orchids, but eclipsed all its previous displays this week with a window containing nearly 4,000 blooms. Of this number about 250 were cattleyas and the rest spray orchids, principally white and pink phalænopsis.

Extensive improvements are in progress in the store of C. C. Morse & Co. on lower Market street, to provide better facilities near the front entrance for plant displays. S. H. G.

The Market.

With the approach of St. Valentine's day much preparation was going on in the stores and in the greenhouses. This day has become one of the big days of the flower business, and with proper encouragement on the part of the florists it is bound to get better.

Roses are not plentiful; in fact, they are not to be had from local growers. Good grades are received from growers outside the state, who are better favored with sunshine during the winter months.

Such plants as cinerarias, cyclamens and primulas are beginning to decline in public favor in the face of the onslaught of well grown tulips, hyacinths, jonquils and narcissi. The quality of these flowers, both cut and in pans, is good. Sweet peas, violets, freesias and hyacinths are finding a welcome market, these being used largely in basket and corsage work.

Various Notes.

The Spokane Florist Co. had its usual good-looking windows during Valentine week, emphasizing novelty baskets and corsage arrangements.

Henry Reimers store has been showing some unusually fine orchids grown at Reimers' station.

L. R. Scott, of Scott Bros., came in from Moscow, Idaho, for a few days' business trip. He is well satisfied with the business done during the winter.

The Market.

For several days last week a spell of bright, warm weather suggestive of spring brought people outdoors. Such conditions hurt the sale of flowers and the demand decreased. The volume of stock coming in was beyond the capacity of the market to absorb it; some waste resulted, but without any slump in prices up to the time of this writing. Should the springlike weather continue and the growers try to force on the market all the cut stock they produce, a crash in prices would be inevitable. Just why the fine weather should reduce the calls for flowers is hard to explain, but it has been proven many times that there are not so many flowers sold when people get outdoors for their pleasures.

A great variety of stock is shown. Nearly everything of a bulbous nature is coming in heavily. Tulips and hyacinths are in their prime. Carnations in all colors are in oversupply for the first time in many months. Valley, grown from a new shipment of pips, is offered. Easter lilies and callas are in heavy cut. There is no oversupply of roses, but the cut has increased. Trianæ cattleyas are plentiful. Sir Watkin daffodils and Darwin tulips have appeared. Some excellent sweet peas are shown. Potted lilacs and genistas have been added to the list of blooming plants.

Various Notes.

The Portland Floral Society will hold its regular meeting February 20 in the Masonic Temple.

Joseph Koida, Karl Bestel and the violet grower at Hillsdale are cutting heavy crops of single violets.

Frank Luepke, of Vancouver, Wash., is greatly elated over the prospects of increases in his business after the interstate bridge is opened. The formal opening of the bridge takes place in June. He says Vancouver is bound to boom.

Thomas Luke, of Max Smith's store, while putting up some decorations, fell and injured his wrist and his kneecap. His injuries did not prevent his showing up at the store.

The Martin & Forbes Co. recently sold two of the largest kentias in this district. The palms were grown by the Rahn & Herbert Co. James Forbes said from now on there would be a sufficient supply of valley.

Henry Kahn is cutting some good sweet peas.

B. Tonseth, of the Tonseth Floral Co., selects his plants and saves his cyclamen seed. A salmon-pink variety is his favorite. He intends to grow more of them another season.

R. C. Cook has built some shelves for his potted stock and has taken his plants off the sidewalk. He says this simple change has increased his sales of plants fifty per cent.

A. F. Lalane said the good weather had decreased his sales. People stop to admire the flowers on display, but pass on, thinking they can gather plenty of wild flowers in a few days.

John Holden, of the Holden Floral Co., said that all hands were busy with bedding stock. There seems to be a shortage of some kinds.

The demand for rose bushes and ornamentals is brisk. S. W. W.
